Statement of Trevor Timm, Freedom of the Press Foundation

Introduction and Background

- 1. I am a co-founder and the executive director of the Freedom of the Press Foundation. Freedom of the Press Foundation (FPF) is a non-profit organization that protects, defends, and empowers public-interest journalism in the 21st century.
- 2. Founded in late 2012, FPF works to preserve and strengthen First and Fourth Amendment rights guaranteed to the press through a variety of avenues, including the development of encryption tools, documentation of attacks on the press, training newsrooms on digital security practices, and advocating for the public's right to know. Dozens of mainstream news organizations rely on encrypted source-protection tools and associated training provided by FPF.
- 3. I received my J.D from New York Law School. I am also a journalist and campaigner on press freedom issues. My writings have appeared in the New York Times, The Guardian, USA Today, The Atlantic, Foreign Policy, The Intercept, Politico, and Columbia Journalism Review.
- 4. I have also worked as an rights campaigner at the Electronic Frontier Foundation, and formerly worked as a researcher and editor for the long-time General Counsel of The New York Times, James Goodale, while he was writing a book on the Pentagon Papers and the First Amendment. I received the Hugh Hefner First Amendment Award for journalism in 2013.
- 5. I have read Part 19 of the Criminal Procedure Rules relating to expert evidence and believe that my opinion is compliant with the rules. I inform the court that FPF has made financial contributions to Julian Assange and WikiLeaks' legal costs in this case, as FPF does where there are vital issues of press freedom at stake.
- 6. I have been provided with the initial and superseding indictment, and the supporting affidavits in this case and I understand that the prosecution maintains a distinction between the activities of Assange as described in the indictment and what constitutes a legitimate journalistic activity. My statement addresses: (1) journalistic activities (2) an update on the current state of press freedom in the USA.

Journalistic Activities

7. The decision to indict Julian Assange on allegations of a "conspiracy" between a publisher and his source or potential sources, and for the publication of truthful information, encroaches on fundamental press freedoms. The routine and protected activities of journalists to interact with their sources are cast as criminal. Encryption tools and cloud storage are deemed suspicious even though journalists frequently conduct their relationships with their sources through digital means. That does not make those activities any less deserving of constitutional protection through the First Amendment.

Secure Submission Systems such as SecureDrop

- 8. WikiLeaks pioneered a secure submission system for journalistic sources prior to 2010. They developed a platform for secure communication between sources and media organizations that was unique at that time and allowed journalists to receive communications from their sources in a way that attempted to ensure that the sources' safety and security were protected (Exhibit 1).
- 9. Prior to WikiLeaks, this concept had generally not been attempted before. However, once WikiLeaks began gaining global attention at around the time of the Afghan and Iraq War Logs, mainstream news organizations took notice and started to set up their own secure systems for the same purpose.
- 10. Organizations such as the Wall Street Journal and Al Jazeera were amongst the next to create such systems for their investigative journalists (Exhibit 2), but efforts by organisations other than WikiLeaks were quite quickly criticized by security experts for their lack of cybersecurity protections and they were soon shut down. For a while, WikiLeaks was the only organisation that operated such a secure system.
- 11. At that time, I was involved in the creation of FPF with a number of individuals including Pentagon Papers whistleblower Daniel Ellsberg. Overclassification was running rampant in the government and was being used to cover up abuse and illegality. In response, we called whistleblowers to come forward and we encouraged news outlets to publicly report on these classified government programs.
- 12. WikiLeaks is not unique in asking for leaked documents of public importance. The idea that every single story since the dawn of time has come from documents being dropped on the doorsteps of journalists, without those journalists asking for information, or returning to the source for more information, borders on fantasy. Journalists have to develop relationships with their sources. When a claim is made, it cannot simply be printed immediately. A journalist will ask for clarification, evidence or documentation to substantiate a claim. Where there is incomplete information, making a request to a source for more is a common practice for journalists in the US and around the world. If this is a crime, thousands of journalists would be committing crimes on a daily basis.
- 13. It is my view that this type of speech has historically been protected by the First Amendment. Moreover, courts in the US have explicitly and implicitly recognized that any attempt to seek criminal or civil sanctions against the press for appearing to incentivize sources to supply information on newsworthy topics faces substantial First Amendment difficulties. I would particularly like to draw attention to a law review article written by one of the country's leading and respected First Amendment attorneys that discusses compelling historical examples of news stories which may not have been published if the First Amendment had not protected journalists in this way: 'Handcuffing the Press: First Amendment Limitations on the Reach of Criminal Statutes as Applied to the Media. (Exhibit 3)

- 14. In 2013, FPF adopted and began developing 'SecureDrop' 1, an open source platform for secure communication between sources and media organizations (exhibit 4). This was in the wake of several controversies involving the US government inappropriately accessing journalists' communications records while they were speaking with their sources. In 2014, the Washington Post and the Guardian both starting using SecureDrop. The whistleblower submission system is now available in 10 languages and used by more than 70 media organizations world-wide, including The New York Times, Wall Street Journal, Associated Press, USA Today, Bloomberg News, CBC, and The Toronto Globe and Mail. I exhibit examples of media organisations using SecureDrop at Exhibit 5.
- 15. Every organisation that uses SecureDrop has to tell the world that they have this facility. On their websites, you will find instructions on how to communicate tips and documents securely to each news organization. FPF also has a guide for how sources can use it safely (Exhibit 6). The "secure tip" pages published by news outlets often ask for newsworthy information and documents. Some use careful, legalistic language; others are more explicit saying "leak to us" (Exhibit 7) In 2020, the use of secure messaging tools to communicate with sources is so widespread, it's generally considered negligent not to provide sources with some level of security and reassurance.
- 16. In my experience, journalists will invite people use their secure submission systems frequently. In fact, we actively encourage them to do so, as the only way anyone will know it exists is if it is advertised (Exhibit 8).
- 17. For example, Pulitizer Prize reporter David Fahrenthold puts a link to SecureDrop in emails he sends to people he contacts in an attempt to learn more about the subjects he is covering (Exhibit 9). It is common for organisations to go further and target particular groups of individuals who might have access to sought-after information which is of interest to their publication (Exhibit 10). In fact, some news outlets have even run advertisements encouraging whistleblowers to get in touch through their SecureDrop (Exhibit 11)

Making requests from sources: Online speech and Wikis

- 18. Individual journalists often make requests for specific documents, through Twitter for example. I myself have advocated for leaks in cases where the US secrecy system is hiding abuse, corruption, or illegal acts. In 2014, I published an article specifically calling for the leak of the classified version of the Senate Committee report on CIA Torture (Exhibit 12, Exhibit 13) and tweeted about it (Exhibit 14), as did others.
- 19. At that time, the government agencies that had been given responsibility for conducting the "declassification review" included the CIA themselves, the same agency accused in the report of systematically torturing detainees (an illegal act under both domestic and international law). The report also accused the CIA of subsequently lying about the program to Congress.

¹ SecureDrop was created by Aaron Swartz who died in 2013 aged 26, after facing a federal prosecution under the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act for allegedly downloading academic articles from JSTOR whilst a student at MIT. A superseding indictment against him amounted to $1 million dollars and 50 years imprisonment as a maximum penalty. He tragically took his own life before his trial.

- 20. Just some of what we know from the unclassified Executive Summary report is that the CIA covertly developed a program of so-called "enhanced interrogation techniques" to torture detainees, made inaccurate claims about the effectiveness of such "techniques" (some of which were leaked to the press), avoided congressional oversight, impeded oversight by CIA Headquarters, the Department of Justice and the Office of the Inspector General and in doing so, led and sustained a program of grave criminality for years after the 9/11 attacks.
- 21. I called for the release of the report because I believed that the American public's right to know what had been done in our name would likely only be vindicated if someone with a conscience was brave enough to leak the full report and hold the CIA accountable for its crimes once and for all.
- 22. The full report remains classified and there have still never been any criminal prosecutions for individuals involved in the torture and abuse of prisoners. In fact, the only reason the American public ever heard about the classified torture program to begin with was because whistleblowers bravely told journalists about it, and news outlets were willing to corroborate and publish the details.
- 23. I consider this type of speech advocating for such leaks to be protected by the First Amendment, while the prosecution appear to view this as a criminal act of "actively soliciting" classified information.
- 24. Similarly, I also note in the indictments the repeated references to the "Most Wanted Leaks" of 2009 document presented as "Assange's solicitation of classified information made through the WikiLeaks website," suggested that Assange alone was encouraging and causing individuals to illegally disclose protected information including classified information to WikiLeaks in a manner contrary to the law. This is simply not correct.
- 25. WikiLeaks was originally intended to be a "wiki", and although they later evolved in a different direction, they kept that part of their name.
- 26. A wiki, which is what the Most Wanted Leaks list was, is a publicly-editable, collaborative project created by its contributors, some of whom are likely to have been journalists asking for documents of public importance.
- 27. To assist the court, I exhibit some explanations of the concept of a wiki (Exhibit 15).
- 28. I have been provided with a copy of the Most Wanted Leaks List of 2009 (already filed in these proceedings) by the instructing solicitors and I note that the title of the list is "Draft Most Wanted Leaks of 2009", and that is described as requesting nominations for "the concealed documents or recordings most sought after by a country's journalists, activists, historians, lawyers, police, or human rights investigators".
- 29. WikiLeaks was not the only organisation involved in the development of such a list at that time. The Center for Democracy and Technology maintain a similar list and did so in 2009 (Exhibit 16).

- 30. The US do not mention the crowd-sourced nature of the Most Wanted Leaks list in their indictment, instead attributing the list to Julian Assange himself.
- 31. I exhibit a recent analysis by my previous employer, the Electronic Frontier Foundation, which explains how the wiki could be edited by the public, and sets out the reason why the contributors to the Most Wanted Leaks page (whomever they were), or indeed any type of wiki like this, are in my opinion and in the opinion of many First Amendment experts, constitutionally protected: (Exhibit 17)

"[T]he Most Wanted Leaks page epitomizes one of the most important features of Wikileaks: that as a publisher, it served the public interest. Wikileaks served activists, human rights defenders, scholars, reformers, journalists and other members of the public. With the Most Wanted Leaks page, it gave members of the public a platform to speak anonymously about documents they believed would further public understanding. It's an astonishingly thoughtful and democratic way for the public to educate and communicate their priorities to potential whistleblowers, those in power, and other members of the public."

32. Requesting more documents from a source, posting online about documents which are in the public interest, using an encrypted chat messenger, or trying to keep a source's identity anonymous are not crimes; they are vital to the journalistic process.

Trump's attacks on freedom of the press

- 33. Freedom of the Press Foundation and I believe that the publication of leaked information is often vital to democracy. In 1971, long-time New York Times reporter Max Frankel wrote an affidavit in the Pentagon Papers case in which he described the fundamental importance of receiving and publishing classified information on a daily basis (Exhibit 18). This hugely important document and its description of how journalists regularly receive and publish classified information rings true for journalists now more than
- 34. Journalists rely on leaked classified information from whistleblowers across government. But Frankel also describes how he received information from high level government officials, even a President, which they themselves had classified as secret, but which they wanted to make public. He sums up the relationship as follows:

"I hope I have begun to convey the very loose and special way in which "classified" information and documentation is regularly employed by our government. Its purpose is not to amuse or flatter a reporter whom many have come to trust, but variously to impress him with their stewardship of the country, to solicit specific publicity, to push out diplomatically useful information without official responsibility, and, occasionally, even to explain and illustrate a policy that can be publicly described in only the vaguest terms... This is the coin of our business and of the officials with whom we regularly deal. In almost every case, it is secret information and much of the time, it is top secret. But the good reporter in Washington, in Saigon, or at the United Nations, gains access to such information and such sources because they wish to use him for loyal purposes of government while he wishes to use them to learn what he can in the service of his readers."

- 35. This system, Frankel wrote, provides a "rule of thumb: The Government hides what it can, pleading necessity as long as it can, and the press pries out what it can, pleading a need and a right to know. Each side in this 'game' regularly 'wins' and 'loses' a round or two. Each fights with the weapons at its command". What Frankel and the rest of the New York Times experienced in the Pentagon Papers litigation, was the beginning of the Government using the Espionage Act to prevent the publication of information which they did not want to be public.
- 36. Several times in the decades since the Pentagon Papers case, various administrations have briefly considered using the Espionage Act to prosecute journalists for publishing stories that contain classified information. In each case, the government quickly concluded such a prosecution would be untenable, likely because it would violate core press freedom rights in the United States. (Exhibit 19)
- 37. Most recently, the Obama administration, which was generally adversarial to WikiLeaks, also considered bringing Espionage Act charges against Assange. They ultimately decided they could not. As Matthew Miller, former spokesman for Obama Attorney General Eric Holder told the Washington Post: "The problem the department has always had in investigating Julian Assange is there is no way to prosecute him for publishing information without the same theory being applied to journalists.... And if you are not going to prosecute journalists for publishing classified information, which the department is not, then there is no way to prosecute Assange."
- 38. Unfortunately, the Trump administration has attempted to stifle press freedom at levels not seen in modern history. The indictment of Julian Assange is just one example of this.
- 39. FPF works in partnership with other press freedom organisations to run the US Press Freedom Tracker, a website for monitoring press freedom violations in the United States. I have been informed that the publication dated January 30, 2019, 'From fake news to enemy of the people: an anatomy of Trump's tweets', has already been filed with the court in these proceedings. I provide an up-to-date copy of the underlying data of President Trump's tweets relating to the press as an exhibit to this statement (Exhibit 20). In it, you can see that Trump has tweeted negative remarks, insults, or threats to the press over 2000 times since he started running for president in 2016.
- 40. President Trump calls journalists who do not share his objectives 'enemies of the people' and goes as far as to threaten to legal action against them on a regular basis. The decision to indict Julian Assange is a massive and unprecedented escalation in Trump's war on journalism, and it is no exaggeration to say the First Amendment itself is at risk. At the moment, President Trump is not able to pursue reporters at the New York Times or the Washington Post when they publish something which his government has classified and which is not in his interests.
- 41. However, the prosecution of Julian Assange will remove these barriers. Trump's Justice Department is attempting to use Assange as a precedent setting case, since it is considerably easier to first prosecute a foreign publisher who is unpopular with US political classes. It is my view that if Julian Assange is extradited, this precedent will be used against other journalists and publishers because prosecutors will be able to say that their similar journalistic activities equally did not have First Amendment protection.

42. This is why these unprecedented charges against Julian Assange and WikiLeaks can be considered to be the most significant and terrifying threat to the First Amendment in the 21st century. I am aware that this view is shared by a great many other press freedom and media organisations, and that experts in these proceedings have already offered similar views in these, but it's worth repeating: The Trump administration is moving to explicitly criminalize national security journalism, and if this prosecution is allowed to go forward, dozens of reporters at the New York Times, Washington Post and elsewhere would also be in danger.

Wikileaks:Submissions

From Wikileaks

English • Deutsch • Português • Русский • Srpskohrvatski / Српскохрватски

Submitting confidential material to Wikileaks is safe, easy and protected by law. We have several methods, but the best for most submissions is:

Click here to securely submit a file online (https://web.archive.org/web/20091104200458/https://secure.wikileaks.org/wiki/Special:Leak)

(bank grade encrypted submission, no logs kept and protected under Swedish and Belgium press secrecy laws)

Chat to the office online and we will answer any questions or problems you might have (https://web.archive.org/web/20091104200458/https://secure.wikileaks.org:8443/chat/irc2.cgi)

(encrypted, anonymous chat)

Over 40,000 articles catalyzed world-wide in every country. Every source protected. No documents censored. All legal attacks defeated.

Wikileaks accepts classified, censored or otherwise restricted material of political, diplomatic or ethical significance. Wikileaks does not accept rumour, opinion or other kinds of first hand reporting or material that is already publicly available.

All staff who deal with sources are accredited journalists. All submissions establish a journalist-source relationship. Online submissions are routed via Sweden and Belgium which have first rate journalist-source shield laws. In Sweden, not only does the law provide protection against any official inquiry into journalists' sources, but it allows a source whose identity has been revealed without permission to initiate criminal prosecutions against an unfaithful journalist who has breached his or her promise of confidentiality.

Wikileaks records no source identifying information and there are a number of submission mechanisms available to deal with even the most sensitive national security information.

Wikileaks is the winner of the 2008 Economist Index on Censorship Freedom of Expression award and the 2009 Amnesty International human rights reporting award (New Media).

Wikileaks has a history breaking major stories in every major media outlet and robustly protecting sources and press freedoms. No source has ever been exposed and no material has ever been censored. Since formation in early 2007, WikiLeaks has been victorious over every legal (and illegal) attack, including those from the Pentagon, the Chinese Public Security Bureau, the Former president of Kenya, the Premier of Bermuda, Scientology, the Catholic & Mormon Church, the largest Swiss private bank, and Russian companies. WikiLeaks has released more classified intelligence documents than the rest of the world press combined.

Submissions via secure upload

Fast, easy and automatically encrypted with the best banking-grade encryption. We keep no records as to where you uploaded from, your time zone, browser or even as to when your submission was made (if you choose a non-zero publishing delay, we set the file time record to be the release date + a random time within that day).

If you are anonymously submitting a Microsoft word file (".doc") that you have edited at some stage, please try to send a PDF document (".pdf") instead, as Word documents may include your name or the name of your computer, see Word file redaction for further information. If you have no means to produce a PDF file your document will be converted by Wikileaks staff.

The process your document will undergo is outlined for understanding submissions.

Discreet Email

Image:Catlovers-ljsf-mail.png

We accept email leaks upto 1000Mb in size however your email system may struggle with attachments this large. Gmail supports up to 20Mb.

We automatically discard all identifying information -- even your timezone and type of mail program. All emails received are encrypted with AES256 (approved for US military Top Secret communications) and stored on Wikileaks owned and controlled servers.

However your mail provider (e.g Yahoo/Gmail/Hotmail) may keep a record of the communication and where you logged in from. History has shown such records are divulged on government request^[1] or commercial subpoena^[2].

If this is a realistic risk for your communication to us, then create an email account not normally associated with your name. You may also wish to access this account from a computer unrelated to you.

If you have material of interest to major intelligence agencies or their allies you can email from a computer you don't normally use. Otherwise you may wish to use our Tor anonymizer.

Major spy agencies, such as the US National Security Agency or the Chinese Ministry of State Security (国家安全部) may intercept the communication if it flows past one of their listening posts (see Connection Anonymity).

Higher risk submissions

You may want to use a computer that you are not associated with if your submission could result in the examination of your computer by people seeking the source. Your computer may keep a record of what websites you have visited and what files you have had on it. Even if you "delete" this information a skilled technician may be able to retrieve it.

If you use another computer (e.g at a netcafe, library); try not to use that computer for any other purpose that might identify you (e.g checking email).

Extremely high risk submissions

If you are of significant political or legal interest your internet connection maybe monitored by your ISP on behalf of government or others.

Additionally if you are submitting material of interest to the major intelligence agencies or their "friends" (defense contractors or allied agencies in other countries), please be aware that some of these agencies record internet traffic and may be particularly curious about traffic to and from our servers.

These groups may record that your computer has sent a lot of information to our computers, even if they cannot see what that information was due to encryption. See Connection Anonymity.

In these circumstances it is best to use a computer that can not be physically traced to you, however we also have technological means around this type of monitoring (which is called "traffic analysis").

The following method, In addition, provides military (as opposed to banking) grade encryption. It requires downloading and installing additional software. You may wish to submit from another computer or by post instead if you are not comfortable with installing and configuring new software.

Click here submit a file using cryptographic onion routing

You can also upload from a netcafe as in Medium risk submissions, but exercise reasonable diligence concerning witness.

For the highest levels of protection you may wish to use our postal submission network.

Submissions via our discreet postal network

Submissions to our postal network offer the strongest form of anonymity and are good for bulk truth-telling.

Steps:

- 1. First place your leak onto a floppy disk, CD, DVD or a USB Flash Drive. If you are using a floppy disks, please create two as they are often unreliable. If you only have paper documents, we will scan them if they are of significant political or media interest (if you are unsure whether this may be the case, please contact us first).
- 2. Post your information to one of our trusted truth facilitators listed below. You may post to whatever country you feel most suitable given the nature of the material and your postal service. If your country's mail system is unreliable, you may wish to send multiple copies, use DHL, FedEX or another postal courier service.

Wikileaks truth facilitators will then upload your submission using their fast internet connection. If you use a floppy disk, be sure to send two for increased reliability.

You can use whatever return address you like, but make doubly sure you have written the destination correctly as postal workers will not be able to return the envelope to you.

After receiving your postal submission our facilitators upload the data to Wikileaks and then destroy the mailed package.

High risk postal submissions

If your leak is extremely high risk, you may wish to post away from your local post office at a location that has no witnesses or video monitoring.

Many CD and DVD writers will include the serial number of the DVD or CD writer onto the CD/DVDs they write. If the post is intercepted this information can in theory be used to track down the manufacturer and with their co-operation, the distributor, the sales agent and so on. Consider whether there are financial records connecting you to the CD/DVD writer sale if your adversary is capable of intercepting your letter to us and has the will to do this type of expensive investigation.

Similarly, CD and DVD media themselves include a non-unique manufacturing "batch number" for each group of around 10,000 CD/DVDs made.

Although we are aware of no instances where the above has been successfully used to trace an individual, anti-piracy operations have used the information to trace piracy outfits who sell tens or hundreds of thousands of counterfeit CDs or DVDs.

If you suspect you are under physical surveillance give the letter to a trusted friend or relative to post. On some rare occasions, targets of substantial political surveillance have been followed to the post office and have had their posted mail seized covertly. In this rare case if you are not intending to encrypt the data and if the police or intelligence services in your country are equipped to perform DNA and/or fingerprint analysis you may wish to take the appropriate handling precautions.

Postal addresses of our trusted truth facilitators

You may post to any country in our network. Pick one that best suits your circumstances. If the country you are residing in has a postal system that is unreliable or frequently censored, you may wish to send your material to multiple addresses concurrently. For unlisted postal addresses, please contact us.

WikiLeaks 2.0: Al Jazeera and the Future of Investigative Journalism

By Dan Meredith and Sascha Meinrath

JAN. 25, 2011

Irrespective of your personal feelings about WikiLeaks, the model it pioneered has challenged traditional journalism models and serves as a harbinger of change for 2011. WikiLeaks-esque tools supporting a new generation of whistleblowers are facilitating fundamental changes in the relationships among sources and journalists. These tools can disseminate exceedingly large amounts of information within remarkably short time frames and challenge journalists, who necessarily must utilize new technologies to vet, manage, source, and expose the needles in the haystack. Likewise, WikiLeaks forces those who harbor sensitive data to think differently about both information compartmentalization and how to address the leaks that will inevitably occur.

As these technologies evolve, new opportunities for technology-mediated journalism are dramatically increasing. Unfortunately, few journalists (and even fewer media outlets) have the technological savvy to take advantage of these new avenues for reporting. If we aspire to achieve a more open, transparent, and investigative Fourth Estate, increased resource-sharing and educational skills-sharing between geeks and (journalistic) gumshoes is desperately needed. Within this context, journalists, technologists, and researchers at the New America Foundation's Open Technology Initiative (OTI) have been pioneering the next generation of journalism. Through OTI's Media Policy Initiative and Native Public Media we are actively exploring both innovative models for 21st century reporting and the policies that will best sustain them. All of these changes are also happening during a time of unprecedented collaborations and that are driving new forms of participatory journalism.

Wilderhology Inectiated oberfallism efforted be a catalyst for weevaluating standal 70 per ating /htt... procedures that have grown increasingly out-of-touch with on-the-ground realities -- the hacker ethos that "information wants to be free" has increasingly come into conflict with modern journalistic notions of "propriety" in vetting sensitive information (e.g., embedding reporters in military units, or becoming cosy with government sources). If 2010 was the year WikiLeaks established itself as a challenge to the journalistic status quo, 2011 will be the year that larger, more well-established media outlets reevaluate their practices and respond.

It is widely accepted that authoritarian and dictatorial control, censorship, and anti-democratic practices go hand-in-hand with efforts to maintain centralized control over data and lockdown of important information. Al Jazeera announced its intention "to shine light on the dark government and corporate activities" by establishing a new Transparency Unit within the organization. The new online tools on the Unit's website are both a place to search through the over 1,600 documents constituting the recently disclosed Palestine Papers and a secure drop box "to submit all forms of content for editorial review and, if merited, online broadcast and transmission on our English and Arabic-language broadcasts."

Though the Transparency Unit's IT framework is technologically similar to WikiLeaks, Al Jazeera is integrating their own analysis of the raw (leaked) data and generating long-form journalism stories to couple with the public release. This "journalism of depth", as Al Jazeera's Director General's, Wadah Khanfar describes it, represents an important evolution in the role of news outlets who are working to support openness and transparency. While we should expect reporting on such a wide release of official documents (in much the same way that the original WikiLeaks release of 250,000 documents was combed over by numerous media outlets), two key differences are the ability of any news outlet to leverage WikiLeaks-type infrastructure to produce traditional investigative reporting at a much lower costs than before, and the speed with which leaked information can be collected, analyzed, aggregated, and disseminated.

Recently OTI technologists were invited to meet with the Transparency Unit journalists and technologists to review the project's technical framework. OTI's goals were to take a top down look at the initiative's infrastructure and provide suggestions on how to support openvacy. Specifically, OTI focused on protecting the integrity of submitted information while ensuring proper separation and safeguards between the Transparency Unit's public-facing infrastructure and Al Jazeera's general IT networks. As more global media outlets begin to focus on this intersection of technology and journalism, OTI will continue to work with these new projects to assist with their technical due diligence.

Like any powerful tool the technologies used by WikiLeaks and Al Jazeera create a Faustian bargain. Along with all the benefits that sunlight provides, there is also a darker side that must be addressed. A lack of institutional privacy may lead to practices where less and less sensitive information is documented, thus undermining transparency and accountability. Within today's "publish or die" media, one can imagine a near-future where whistleblowers, rather than working for weeks or months with a single news outlet, deliver massive quantities of data to numerous outlets who then strive to be the first to publish. Within such an environment, careful vetting of information will increasingly take a back seat to expediency, laying the foundation for potentially explosive situations where the public identification and naming of malefactors and innocents alike becomes normative.

For WikiLeaks, the writing may already be on the wall -- it has a direct competitor in Open-Leaks, and the critical innovation that defined its success -- a digital dropbox -- has already been copied by one leading media broadcaster. And while imitation may be the sincerest form of flattery, the continuing importance of any single whistleblower website will diminish as multiple WikiLeaks-esque platforms are developed. In the interim, we should applaud the new-found power and protections afforded whistleblowers by these new technologies, but must also go forward knowing the advantages and disadvantages of a world where radical transparency happens irregardless of the sensitivity or repercussions of the information disclosed.

Handcuffing the Press: First Amendment Limitations on the Reach of Criminal Statutes as Applied to the Media

ABOUT THE AUTHORS: Lee Levine is a partner of Levine Sullivan Koch & Schulz, L.L.P. For more than three decades, he has represented media clients in libel, invasion of privacy, reporter's privilege, copyright, and related First Amendment cases. In the U.S. Supreme Court, he argued Bartnicki v. Vopper, 532 U.S. 514 (2001), the landmark decision in which the Court reaffirmed the principle that the news media cannot be held liable in damages for the publication of truthful information about a matter of public concern absent a governmental interest of the highest order. He is the co-author of the 1200-page treatise Newsgathering and the Law, and has served as an Adjunct Professor of Law at Georgetown University Law Center since 1989.

Nathan E. Siegel, a partner of Levine Sullivan Koch & Schulz, L.L.P., has spent his career representing media clients in First Amendment, intellectual property, and entertainment law cases. Mr. Siegel previously served as a litigation counsel at ABC, Inc., where he supervised the defense of ABC News in the landmark case Food Lion v. ABC, 194 F.3d 505 (4th Cir. 1999), and many other matters. He currently serves on the Board of Trustees of the Maryland-Delaware-DC Press Association Foundation and is an Adjunct Professor of Law at the University of Maryland Law School.

Jeanette Melendez Bead, a partner of Levine Sullivan Koch & Schulz, L.L.P., represents media organizations in libel, privacy, and related matters in courts around the country. She regularly counsels clients on newsgathering issues and successfully represented King World Productions, Inc. in a federal wiretap and trespass action arising from an undercover investigation of traveling magazine sales companies. Ms. Bead has served as an Adjunct Professor at the University of Maryland's Philip Merrill College of Journalism.

I. INTRODUCTION

In 2005, a federal grand jury indicted Steven Rosen and Keith Weissman, former employees of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), for allegedly conspiring with a government official to obtain and transmit national defense information in violation of the Espionage Act of 1917.1 The Department of Justice alleged that Rosen and Weissman had conspired with a third defendant, Lawrence Franklin, to obtain national defense information Franklin had acquired as a Pentagon analyst, and to communicate that information to journalists and foreign officials.² The conduct on which the AIPAC prosecution was based—the receipt and transmission of classified information in violation of the Espionage Act—led to renewed concerns among journalists about the reach of this statute and similar laws to their own newsgathering conduct. Although the United States ultimately abandoned the AIPAC prosecution, claiming several rulings in the case had made it difficult for the government to meet its burden, the concerns for journalists raised by the prosecution remain.3 In the AIPAC prosecution, the government sought to hold private citizens criminally liable for the kind of conduct journalists engage in every day—receiving and transmitting information from persons who themselves may have violated the law in providing it.

This article examines the limitations, if any, placed by the First Amendment on the permissible reach of criminal statutes as applied to journalists, either directly or through principles of secondary liability, in the wake of the publication of information allegedly received from a person who may have accessed or provided such information in violation of a criminal statute. Part II provides an overview of the general First Amendment principles that must inform any analysis of the reach of criminal statutes to the media's newsgathering conduct. Part III examines the interplay between the First Amendment and various theories of criminal liability as applied to the press's unauthorized receipt and publication of information ordinarily protected against public disclosure. Part IV summarizes the authors' conclusions about the constraints imposed by the First Amendment on the prosecution of journalists for engaging in such conduct.

See, e.g., United States v. Rosen, 599 F. Supp. 2d 690 (E.D. Va. 2009). Rosen and Weissman were indicted under two subsections of the Espionage Act, 18 U.S.C. § 793(d) and (g), which criminalize the communication of national defense information to persons not authorized to receive it. Rosen, 599 F.
Supp. 2d at 693.

Franklin pled guilty to several charges as part of a plea bargain and received a twelve-year prison sentence, which was later reduced to ten months' house arrest. Rosen, 599 F. Supp. 2d at 693; Jerry Markon, Sentence Reduced in Pentagon Case, Wash. Post, June 12, 2009, at A12.

^{3.} Indeed, a Federal Bureau of Investigation linguist recently pled guilty to providing classified information to a blogger and was sentenced to twenty months in prison, suggesting that unauthorized disclosures of information to the press will continue to raise questions about the press's alleged role in criminal conduct. II. GOVERNING FIRST AMENDMENT PRINCIPLES

A. Truthful Speech About Newsworthy Matters

Contemporary interpretation of the First Amendment proceeds from the premise that "[t]he freedom of speech and of the press guaranteed by the Constitution embraces at the least the liberty to discuss publicly and truthfully all matters of public concern without . . . fear of subsequent punishment." Thus, in a variety of contexts, the Supreme Court has emphasized that "truthful information about a matter of public significance" receives extremely broad constitutional protection from the reach of criminal and civil statutes. The Court has in fact explained that, even when "a matter of public significance" is not involved, "state action to punish the publication of truthful information seldom can satisfy constitutional standards." In short, there is an "overarching 'public interest, secured by the Constitution, in the dissemination of truth."

In the context of publications addressing newsworthy matters of public concern, moreover, the Supreme Court has held that the protection of truthful speech is at its zenith. Under such circumstances, "[t]ruth may not be the subject of either civil or criminal sanctions." Indeed, the "general proposition that freedom of expression upon public questions is secured by the First Amendment" is so firmly entrenched in the First Amendment that it forms the foundation for the Supreme Court's elaborate jurisprudence holding that even false and defamatory speech about newsworthy matters must be afforded broad protection from criminal and civil liability in order to provide sufficient "breathing space" for the dissemination of truthful information about such matters. As the Court explained most recently in Bartnicki v. Vopper, [12] hose cases all relied on our 'profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wideopen," and "require[] the conclusion" that "if a newspaper lawfully obtains truthful information about a matter of public significance then state officials may not constitutionally punish publication of the information, absent a need \dots of the highest order."

B. Newsworthy Matters of "Public Concern"

As the Supreme Court observed in Time, Inc. v. Hill, "[t]he guarantees for speech and press are not the preserve of political expression or comment upon public affairs, essential as those are to healthy government." Rather, the Court has explained that "[f]reedom of discussion, if it [is to] fulfill its historic function in this nation, must embrace all issues about which information is needed or appropriate to enable the members of society to cope with the exigencies of their period." Thus, in a variety of contexts, courts have determined that "a publication is newsworthy if some reasonable members of the community could entertain a legitimate interest in it." These holdings are synthesized in the Restatement (Second) of Torts:

The scope of a matter of legitimate concern to the public is not limited to "news," in the sense of reports of current events or activities. It extends also to the use of names, likenesses or facts in giving information to the public for purposes of education, amusement or enlightenment, when the public may reasonably be expected to have a legitimate interest in what is published.¹⁷

And matters cease to be newsworthy only "when the community has no interest in them beyond the voyeuristic thrill of penetrating the wall of privacy that surrounds a stranger," or when the interest in the matter constitutes "a morbid and sensational prying into private lives for its own sake." ¹⁹

In this manner, both the First Amendment and the common law distinguish the unprotected publication of putatively private information "for its own sake," on the one hand, from the protected publication of the same information when it relates to matters of broader public concern, on the other.²⁰ Thus, for example, in Florida Star v.

(quoting Harry Kalven, Jr., Privacy in Tort Law—Were Warren and Brandeis Wrong?, 31 L. & CONTEMP. PROBS. 326, 355–56 (1966)) (internal quotation mark omitted)); Gilbert v. Med. Econ. Co., 665 F.2d 305, 308 (10th Cir. 1981)

B.J.F., where a newspaper acquired and published the name of a rape victim in violation of state law, the Supreme Court held that, though unquestionably private, the plaintiff's identity constituted "information about a matter of public significance," especially "[a]t a time in which we are daily reminded of the tragic reality of rape." Similarly, in Shulman v. Group W Productions, Inc., the California Supreme Court concluded that a television broadcast depicting an accident victim's "appearance and words during [a] rescue and evacuation" were "of legitimate public interest," both because "[a]utomobile accidents are by their nature of interest to that great portion of the public that travels frequently by automobile" and because the "rescue and medical treatment of accident victims is also of legitimate concern to much of the public, involving as it does a critical service that any member of the public may someday need." ²²

In addition, the U.S. Supreme Court has emphasized that the protection afforded by the First Amendment to newsworthy matters of public concern may not vary based on the identity of the publisher of such information, the perceived "value" of the information reported, or whether the publisher profited from its dissemination. First, as the Court famously explained in Lovell v. City of Griffin:

The liberty of the press is not confined to newspapers and periodicals. It necessarily embraces pamphlets and leaflets The press in its historic connotation comprehends every sort of publication which affords a vehicle of information and opinion.²³

Thus, for example, in Hustler Magazine, Inc. v. Falwell, the Court extended First Amendment protection to an advertising parody published in Hustler magazine, which depicted the Reverend Jerry Falwell engaged in an "incestuous rendezvous with his mother in an outhouse."²⁴ The Court so held despite its recognition that the parody "published in Hustler [was] at best a distant cousin" of the editorial cartoons that for centuries have played a significant role in public discourse, reasoning that "a central tenet of the First Amendment [is] that the government must remain neutral in the marketplace of ideas."²⁵

(holding that the newsworthiness concept "properly restricts liability for public disclosure of private facts to the extreme case, thereby providing the breathing space needed by the press to properly exercise effective editorial judgment").

HANDCUFFING THE PRESS

Second, the Supreme Court has expressly disavowed any test of whether particular "speech" falls within the protections of the First Amendment that is premised on ad boc determinations of its "value" in comparison with the "harm" it is alleged to have perpetrated. ²⁶ Instead, the Court has constructed a handful of narrow, precisely defined categories of expression that are not protected by the First Amendment at all, including obscenity, defamation, and "fighting words," and has rejected the notion that constitutional analysis of otherwise protected expression should depend on judicial assessment of its comparative worth. ²⁸ As the Ninth Circuit has explained:

[T]he first amendment is as close to an absolute as we have in our jurisprudence: Speech shielded by the amendment's protective wing must remain inviolate regardless of its inherent worth. The distaste we may feel as individuals toward the content or message of protected expression cannot, of course, detain us from discharging our duty as guardians of the Constitution.²⁹

Finally, the Court has consistently held that whether a publication is sold for profit is of no relevance for First Amendment purposes.³⁰ Accordingly, the Ninth

Circuit has explained that "[a] profit motive . . . does not diminish a journalist's First Amendment rights" and "does not render its newsgathering and reporting activities . . . [as] entitled to less than full First Amendment protection."³¹

C. Governmental Interest of the "Highest Order"

As the Supreme Court noted in Bartnicki v. Vopper, the protections afforded by the First Amendment to accurate speech about newsworthy matters may properly give way only in the face of a statutory scheme that is narrowly tailored to vindicate a governmental interest of the "highest order."³² In this regard, the Court has explained that the First Amendment's protections may properly be divested "only in exceptional cases"³³ because imposition of "a penal sanction for publishing lawfully obtained, truthful information . . . requires the highest form of state interest to sustain its validity."³⁴ To date, the Court has defined such "exceptional cases" narrowly to include the following circumstances: "[W]hen the country is at war, when a sovereign seeks to protect the primary requirements of decency by prohibiting obscenity, and when the security of community life is threatened by incitements to acts of violence and the overthrow by force of an orderly government."³⁵

On several occasions, the Supreme Court has addressed a perceived "collision between claims of privacy and those of the free press," and, in each such instance, it has applied the First Amendment to protect truthful speech about newsworthy matters. In Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn, for example, the father of a rape-murder victim brought an invasion of privacy action against a broadcasting company for disclosing in a news report his daughter's identity in violation of a Georgia statute. The Court held that the First Amendment prohibited such a claim in the face of the "public interest, secured by the Constitution, in the dissemination of truth," because the broadcast involved a newsworthy matter of public concern, as opposed to revelation of "purely private libels, totally unrelated to public affairs."

the Court noted "a strong tide running in favor of the so-called right of privacy," but concluded that, despite these "impressive credentials," the government interest in preserving personal privacy must yield to the "First and Fourteenth Amendments and . . . the public interest in a vigorous press." ¹²

Similarly, in Smith v. Daily Mail Publishing Co., the Court confronted the criminal prosecution of a newspaper, which, following a shooting at a junior high school, obtained and published the name of the alleged juvenile assailant in violation of a West Virginia statute.⁴³ At the outset of its analysis, the Court noted that "[o]ur recent decisions demonstrate that state action to punish the publication of truthful information seldom can satisfy constitutional standards."⁴⁴ Accordingly, the Court held that the state's interest in protecting the privacy of youthful offenders—an interest that was not only of immediate reputational nature but that also related to the ability of the child to rejoin society after the imposition of any sanction by the juvenile court—was not of sufficient magnitude when confronted by the First Amendment.⁴⁵

In Florida Star, the statute at issue made it "unlawful to 'print, publish, or broadcast . . . in any instrument of mass communication' the name of the victim of a sexual offense."⁴⁶ In holding that it could not be applied to a newspaper reporter who learned the name of a rape victim and thereafter published it in the newspaper's "Police Reports" section, the Court explained that, although the governmental interests said to be served by the statute—i.e., the protection of the privacy of victims, the protection of the physical safety of victims, and the encouragement of victims to report such crimes—were "highly significant," they were nevertheless insufficient to trump the First Amendment.⁴⁷

Most recently, in Bartnicki v. Vopper, the Court held that two radio stations and a radio talk show host could not be held liable under the federal and Pennsylvania wiretap statutes for receiving from a third party, and thereafter disclosing to their listeners, a tape recording of a private telephone conversation between the two plaintiffs that had been surreptitiously recorded in violation of those statutes. ⁴⁸ The Court noted that the case "present[s] a conflict between interests of the highest order—on the one hand, the interest in the full and free dissemination of information concerning public issues, and, on the other hand, the interest in individual privacy" fortified by the right of the plaintiffs, grounded in the First Amendment as well, to engage in "private speech."⁴⁹ Nevertheless, even though the "stated purpose[]" of the wiretap statutes was "to protect effectively the privacy of wire and oral communications,"⁵⁰ and even though "[p]rivacy of communication[s] is an important interest,"⁵¹ especially given the fact that "the fear of public disclosure of private conversations might well have a chilling effect on private speech,"⁵² the Court held that the statutes could not be applied in these circumstances because "[they] impose[] sanctions on the publication of truthful information of public concern."⁵³ Specifically, the Court held as follows:

In this case, privacy concerns give way when balanced against the interest in publishing matters of public importance. As Warren and Brandeis stated in their classic law review article: "The right of privacy does not prohibit any publication of matter which is of public or general interest." One of the costs associated with participation in public affairs is an attendant loss of privacy.⁵⁴

- 49. Id. at 518. Because the wiretap statutes served to vindicate the First Amendment-based right to engage in "private speech," the Court distinguished its decisions in Cox Broadcasting, Daily Mail, and Florida Star on the ground that, while those cases involved assertions of an important—but non-constitutional—interest in protecting personal privacy, in Bartnicki there were "important interests to be considered on both sides of the constitutional calculus." Id. at 533. As Justice Breyer explained in his concurring opinion in Bartnicki, in cases in which there are constitutional rights "on both sides of the equation, the key question becomes one of proper fit," id. at 536 (Breyer, J., concurring) (quoting Turner Broad. D. "Unlawfully Acquired" Information

In all of its cases addressing the First Amendment's protection of truthful information about newsworthy matters, the Court has recognized that such protections necessarily apply when the information has been "lawfully obtain[ed]" by its publisher. In Bartnicki, the Court specifically considered whether, "[w]here the punished publisher of information has obtained the information in question in a manner lawful in itself but from a source who has obtained it unlawfully, may the government punish the ensuing publication of that information based on the defect in a chain?" The Court answered the question in the negative, holding that "a stranger's illegal conduct does not suffice to remove the First Amendment shield from speech about a matter of public concern." This is so, the Court explained, even when the press obtains the information with actual knowledge of the source's unlawful conduct.

This conclusion followed from the Court's previous decisions, most notably Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia⁵⁹ and Florida Star. In Landmark Communications, unidentified persons—including one described by the resulting article as "a lawyer subpoenaed to appear at the hearing" —provided information in violation of a criminal statute to a newspaper regarding a confidential proceeding before Virginia's Judicial Inquiry and Review Commission. The Court held that the statute could not constitutionally be applied to the newspaper. Although the Court was silent on this point, it appears that whoever initially disclosed confidential information in Landmark did so in violation of a statutory duty imposed on him as a participant in the Commission's proceedings. Similarly, in Florida Star, the police official who provided the rape victim's name to the newspaper did so in violation of an analogous duty. Nevertheless, in both cases, as in Bartnicki itself, the Court held 478 (Cal. 1998) (holding that "newsworthiness" is a "complete bar to common law liability" under the "publication of private facts" tort); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652D (1977) (stating that to impose liability for publication of private facts, plaintiff must prove that the published material "is not of legitimate concern to the public").

that such unlawful conduct by a newspaper's source does not vitiate the protection afforded to the newspaper by the First Amendment.

Following Bartnicki, the lower courts have explored the extent to which a publisher's interaction with a source who unlawfully acquires information can be said to implicate the publisher itself in illegal conduct that might provide a constitutional basis for civil or criminal liability. In Boehner v. McDermott, for example, which the Supreme Court remanded to the D.C. Circuit for further consideration in light of Bartnicki, the court of appeals addressed the liability of a Congressman who met personally with a married couple that had illegally recorded a wireless telephone conversation, acquired a recording of the conversation from them, promised them both anonymity and immunity from prosecution in return, and then disseminated the recording to two newspaper reporters.⁶⁴ Although the court was sharply divided on the issue, a majority rejected the contention that "[o]ne who obtains information in an illegal transaction, with full knowledge the transaction is illegal, has not 'lawfully obtain[ed]' that information."65 Rather, the court's majority concluded that "the otherwise-lawful receipt of unlawfully obtained information remains in itself lawful, even where the receiver knows or has reason to know that the source has obtained the information unlawfully."66 As the majority explained:

The Supreme Court has decided the first issue of this case, that is, whether the United States . . . can constitutionally bar the publication of information originally obtained by unlawful interception but otherwise lawfully received by the communicator, in the negative. We venture to say that an opposite rule would be fraught with danger. Just as Representative McDermott knew that the information had been unlawfully intercepted, so did the newspapers to whom he passed the information We do not believe the First Amendment permits this interdiction of public information either at the stage of the newspaper-reading public, of the newspaper-publishing communicators, or at the stage of Representative McDermott's disclosure to the news media. 67

He therefore had no First Amendment right to disclose the tape to the media.").

HANDCUFFING THE PRESS

Similarly, in Jean v. Massachusetts State Police, the First Circuit, applying Bartnicki and citing the D.C. Circuit's decision in Boehner, held that the First Amendment protected the Internet posting of an audio and video recording of an arrest and warrantless search of a private residence, even though the person who posted it had reason to know at the time she received the recording that it had been made illegally. Each the court rejected the contention that "the essential distinction between this case and Bartnicki was that [i]n Bartnicki, the interceptor had already disseminated the tape before [the defendant] passively received it and disseminated it further," while in Jean, "it was Jean's active collaboration" with the interceptor "that made his unlawful dissemination possible in the first instance." Relying on Boehner II, the court reasoned that, "if McDermott had been a private citizen, like Jean, the court would have concluded that his disclosure of the tape was subject to First Amendment protection regardless of the fact that he received the tape directly" from the interceptor with knowledge that it had been obtained unlawfully.

These decisions reflect the reality that the press routinely seeks out information from a variety of sources, many of whom may be held to have violated a statute, a private contract, or some other legal or ethical duty either in obtaining the information or by disclosing it to the press. The courts have nevertheless concluded that, when the press induces sources to disclose what they know about newsworthy matters, it is protected by the First Amendment when it proceeds to publish such information, regardless of the legality of its source's actions.⁷¹

III. CRIMINAL LIABILITY AND THE FIRST AMENDMENT

A. Applicable Principles of Statutory Construction

To satisfy due process, a criminal statute must define the prohibited conduct "with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited" and "in a manner that does not encourage arbitrary and discriminatory

McClatchy Newspapers, 223 Cal. Rptr. 58, 64 (Ct. App. 1986) (holding that the First Amendment precludes tort claims against the press for "soliciting, inquiring, requesting and persuading agents, employees and members of the State Bar to engage in the unauthorized and unlawful disclosure of information" because "the news gathering component of the freedom of the press—the right to seek out information—is privileged at least to the extent it involves 'routine . . . reporting techniques'" such as "asking persons questions, including those with confidential or restricted information" (alteration in original) (quoting Smith v. enforcement."⁷² A criminal statute that fails to satisfy these conditions will be deemed "void-for-vagueness."⁷³ But if it can, a court will construe a statute narrowly to avoid such a result.⁷⁴

The Court applied these principles of statutory construction most recently in Skilling v. United States, a decision arising from the criminal prosecution of long-time Enron executive Jeffrey Skilling.⁷⁵ In Skilling, the Court considered whether 18 U.S.C. § 1346, known as the "honest services fraud" provision of the federal mail and wire fraud statutes,⁷⁶ was impermissibly vague and therefore violated the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.⁷⁷ The Court construed the statute to reach only bribes and kickbacks, thereby limiting its reach to avoid offending the Fifth Amendment.⁷⁸

Section 1346 establishes that a "scheme or artifice to defraud" for purposes of the federal mail and wire fraud statutes "includes a scheme or artifice to deprive another of the intangible right of honest services."⁷⁹ The legislative history of § 1346 reveals that the predominant purpose of the statute was to "reverse" the Supreme Court's decision in McNally v. United States, in which the Court held that the mail fraud statute was designed to protect money and property rights, not the alleged right of the citizenry to "good government."⁸⁰ Thus, in enacting § 1346, Congress sought nothing more than to enable the wire and mail fraud statutes to be used as vehicles for prosecution of public corruption.⁸¹

Given its broad language, however, judicial construction of § 1346 before Skilling understandably focused on "the need to find limiting principles' to cabin" its scope because, "[w]ithout some kind of limiting principle, honest services wire fraud could potentially make relatively innocuous conduct subject to criminal sanctions."82 Thus, although some courts concluded that the statute may reach the conduct of private, non-governmental defendants in at least some circumstances, ⁸³ others extended such liability to private persons only where there was a fiduciary relationship between the victim and the defendant. ⁸⁴ Still others did so only where the defendant intended or reasonably could have foreseen that the scheme would cause economic or property harm. ⁸⁵ In any case, under certain circumstances journalists obtaining information from persons who violated a law (or their employer's policies) in accessing or disclosing the information arguably were vulnerable to prosecution under the statute. ⁸⁶ For its part, the Court noted in Skilling that "there was considerable disarray" among the courts of appeals concerning the proper scope of the statute's application. ⁸⁷ Still, the Court declined to invalidate the statute, choosing instead to construe it, consistent with its legislative history, to reach only bribery and kickback schemes. ⁸⁸ In doing so, the Court explained: "It has long been our practice, . . . before striking a federal statute as impermissibly vague, to consider whether the prescription is amenable to a limiting construction."

This principle of narrow construction should apply with equal force where the prosecution in question arises from the newsgathering conduct of a journalist or news organization. As the Court has put it, criminal statutes that potentially inhibit the exercise of First Amendment rights "must be scrutinized with particular care." Most significantly, such statutes must be construed narrowly to avoid conflicts with the First Amendment. 91 Narrow construction has been deemed to be particularly appropriate limiting principles, honest services fraud amendment could criminalize "every breach of contract or every misstatement made in the course of dealing").

appropriate when the legislative history of a generally applicable statutory scheme evinces no intention to criminalize the activities of the press and others engaged in the process of collecting and disseminating information to the public.⁹²

Let us suppose, for example, that the federal government sought to prosecute a journalist for receiving and publishing non-public health information about a member of Congress under a theory that the journalists aided and abetted a violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1320d-6(a), the provision of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) authorizing criminal sanctions for the acquisition and disclosure of protected health information.

Neither the face of HIPAA nor its legislative history reveals any suggestion that Congress considered or otherwise sought to impose criminal sanctions on the process by which the press reports to the public about newsworthy matters. Thus, for example, the criminal penalties for the unlawful use, acquisition, and disclosure of health information pursuant to HIPAA apply, on their face, only to the conduct of "covered entities," which include health plans and health care providers, but contain no reference to the press or to others who disseminate health-related information about newsworthy subjects to the public. HIPAA's legislative history confirms both that its stated purpose was to promote "the efficiency and effectiveness of the health care system, by encouraging the development of a health information system through the establishment of standards and requirements for the electronic transmission of certain health information," and that it is devoid of references to any perceived problem—warranting congressional intervention or otherwise—relating to the disclosure to or subsequent dissemination of health-related information by the press.

HANDCUFFING THE PRESS

Construing HIPAA to authorize the prosecution of the press, under a theory of aiding and abetting, necessarily would implicate the First Amendment, and, in view of HIPAA's legislative history, a court could fairly conclude that the statute never was intended to reach the conduct of the press in gathering information from persons who themselves may have violated the statute.⁹⁶

B. Criminal Liability and the Press

The First Amendment's restrictions on the application of criminal liability theories to members of the press who seek out, receive, and publish information about newsworthy matters are not simply theoretical. Rather, they have informed the relationship between the press and the criminal justice system every time a controversy has arisen in the lower federal courts over the publication of information leaked to journalists by someone under a legal obligation not to disclose it. As we discuss below, many of the most important stories in the history of journalism were based on information provided by sources in violation of a criminal statute.⁹⁷ In every such case, moreover, a literal reading of the relevant statutes would support an argument that the journalist illegally received information or conspired with a source to obtain or disclose information for an unauthorized purpose.⁹⁸ Nevertheless, it appears that no journalist has ever been prosecuted under such theories. Rather, journalists have only been prosecuted in the rare circumstance where they directly committed an unlawful physical act, such as removing a piece of debris from the wreckage of a sabotaged aircraft,⁹⁹ "stealing documents," or engaging in "private wiretapping."¹⁰⁰

Indeed, we are aware of only one attempt to bring

Several cases in both the criminal and civil context have in fact considered what might happen if a prosecution of the press beyond such circumstances were ever attempted. All have concluded that the First Amendment would likely pose obvious and potentially insurmountable barriers to the use of both direct and secondary liability theories to criminalize the pursuit of information by journalists. In United States v. Morison, for example, a government employee was convicted under both the Espionage Act and 18 U.S.C. § 641 of providing classified photographs of Soviet naval installations to Jane's Defense Weekly ("Jane's"), a publication that reported on security-related matters.¹⁰¹ The government charged that the employee, Samuel Morison, had been effectively compensated by Jane's for his actions. 102 He was a paid consultant to Jane's at the time, there was evidence that Jane's had affirmatively solicited the transmission of documents from him, and the government alleged that he hoped to improve his chances of permanent employment at Jane's by providing the photographs.¹⁰³ Not only was Jane's never charged, but the prosecution of Morison itself proved controversial in large part due to concern that, in a future case, the government might be tempted to pursue journalists involved in other exchanges of information.¹⁰⁴

As a result, in affirming Morison's conviction, two members of the Fourth Circuit's three-judge panel wrote separately to emphasize their doubt that the First Amendment would countenance such a prosecution. Judge Wilkinson explained that "Morison as a source would raise newsgathering rights on behalf of press organizations that are not being, and probably could not be, prosecuted under the espionage statute" and stated that "it is important to emphasize what is not before us today. This prosecution was not an attempt to apply the espionage statute to the press for either the receipt or publication of classified materials." Judge Phillips likewise expressed his concern that the court's affirmance of Morison's conviction not be construed to "threaten[] the vital newsgathering functions of the press."

A number of federal courts have similarly considered First Amendment-based overbreadth challenges by defendants to the application of § 641 to the oral transmission of government information. In so doing, several have sua sponte cautioned that obtaining and disclosing information to the press—which was not at issue in a prosecution against a journalist that is even remotely based on the theories discussed herein. In 1973, Les Whitten, "the chief investigative reporter for syndicated columnist Jack Anderson," was charged as a principal with receiving stolen government documents in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 641 (2006). See Mark Feldstein, The Jailing of a Journalist: Prosecuting the Press for Receiving Stolen Documents, 10 Сомм. L. & Pol'y 137 (2005) (offering detailed account of Whitten's prosecution). However, the charges were subsequently dropped when the grand jury declined to issue an indictment. Id. at 161.

any of those cases—would raise substantial constitutional questions. Thus, in United States v. Jeter, the Sixth Circuit held that, in the "limited circumstances" of that case—which involved leaking grand jury information to the targets of an investigation—no serious First Amendment barrier existed to affirming the conviction.¹⁰⁷ Nevertheless, the court noted that "[w]e do not attempt to determine the constitutionality of Section 641 in a 'Pentagon Papers' kind of situation."¹⁰⁸

Courts have raised analogous concerns in the civil context. In Zerilli v. Evening News Ass'n, for example, the D.C. Circuit considered a Bivens claim arising after newspaper reporter unlawfully conspired with federal officials to procure confidential transcripts of illegal wiretaps.¹⁰⁹ The Court rejected the theory because, among other reasons, "finding the newspaper liable in the present case would amount to holding a newspaper liable in damages for uncovering and publishing information that it deems newsworthy. The values served by a free and vigilant press militate against such a result."¹¹⁰ For this reason, the press has been held potentially liable for conspiring with federal officials to violate private rights only where some non-speech-related conduct causing tangible injury to person or property, such as a physical trespass, was at issue.¹¹¹

Indeed, the long history of clashes between the government, private parties, and journalists over subpoenas for their confidential sources reinforces the principle that a criminal prosecution of reporters whose sources leak information to them would be beyond the constitutional pale. Such subpoenas have usually arisen in the context of cases in which confidential sources are alleged to have unlawfully provided information to a journalist. Laws proscribing the disclosure of information, such as the Privacy Act of 1974¹¹³ and Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(e), are the most common sources of such disputes. In almost every such case, the facts describe

The reference to "Pentagon Papers" is to *New York Times Co. v. The role of the First Amendment in this context is perhaps best illustrated by *United States v. issue in Rosen to the receipt and disclosure of purely oral information.¹²² As applied in those circumstances, the district court in Rosen rejected the government's argument that no First Amendment issue was raised by the novel indictment.¹²³ Rather, it resolved the defendants' constitutional arguments by holding that the statute could only survive First Amendment scrutiny as applied to the specific facts alleged if construed narrowly to require the government to prove a heightened intent requirement—i.e., that the defendants acted with a bad-faith purpose to undermine national security.¹²⁴

C. Potential for Chilling Speech About Newsworthy Matters

Taken as a whole, these disparate strands of law appear to reveal a consistent theme. Courts have both explicitly and implicitly recognized that any attempt to seek criminal (or civil) sanctions against the press for providing what might be deemed to be incentives to sources so that they will provide information about newsworthy matters would face substantial First Amendment hurdles.¹²⁵

A different constitutional rule—one that would permit the imposition of criminal liability on the press when it can broadly be said to have "induced" or "conspired" with a source to secure newsworthy information for publication—would fundamentally alter public discourse. If, for example, the press could be prosecuted for "aiding and abetting" violations of the Privacy Act, it would appear that the Washington Post, Bob Woodward, and Carl Bernstein could all have been charged in the wake of their persistent solicitation and receipt of information from FBI Deputy Director Mark Felt about the FBI's then-ongoing investigation of specific, identified persons implicated in the Watergate investigation who had not yet been indicted. Similarly, it would appear that the San Francisco Chronicle could have been charged with aiding and abetting a violation of Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(e) when a criminal defense lawyer agreed to provide the Chronicle with details of grand jury testimony given by some of the most prominent athletes in professional sports as part of a Pulitzer-Prize winning series of articles about the extent to which performance-enhancing drugs had infiltrated both professional and amateur athletics. criminal liability could apparently have been imposed on the Wall Street Journal for its solicitation and receipt of internal Enron documents from confidential sources within the company that detailed Enron's illegal accounting practices; those documents led to a groundbreaking series of articles, but were provided by disgruntled employees, arguably in breach of their fiduciary obligations to the company.¹²⁸

By the same token, it would appear that analogous theories of liability for violations of HIPAA would have provided the basis for criminal prosecution of the Orange County Register as a result of its Pulitzer Prize-winning reporting on the unethical practices of the previously acclaimed fertility clinic at the University of California-Irvine.¹²⁹ That reporting was based on the contents of putatively confidential medical records obtained by the newspaper from a source within the clinic—records which documented how eggs retrieved from one patient were implanted in another, without the knowledge or consent of the donor.¹³⁰ Under the same theories, one could envision prosecution of a newspaper that reported, based on confidential medical records received from a hospital employee, that the Vice President had developed a serious heart condition, that several hospital patients who had recently traveled abroad had contracted a highly contagious disease and brought it to the United States, or that the serious illness of several hospital patients had been traced to tainted meat circulating in the national food supply.

IV. CONCLUSION: FIRST AMENDMENT LIMITATIONS

The preceding discussion illuminates the First Amendment-based principles that likely would govern judicial determination of the constitutionality of a prosecution of the press in the wake of its acquisition and publication of information received from a person who accessed or provided such information in violation of a criminal statute. These principles suggest that, at a minimum, the solicitation, receipt, and publication of information by the press can constitutionally be deemed to violate such statutes only if their scope is cabined, by legislative amendment or judicial decision, in material ways. Otherwise, the reach of such statutes would appear to be extraordinarily broad, reaching any effort by a reporter to secure information from a source that, for example, its employer (including the government) would prefer remain secret. Accordingly, it appears that, at a minimum, the application of such statutes to the press, whether directly or through laws imposing secondary liability, can survive First Amendment scrutiny only if construed to require that (1) the press conduct at issue be unrelated to communicative acts involving the transmission of information, or (2) the defendant evince some bad-faith purpose other than and beyond the intent to obtain information for the purpose of reporting it to the public.

Absent such limitations, it appears there is a substantial argument that any prosecution of the press for violating such a criminal statute, for aiding and abetting a violation of such a statute, or for conspiring with a source to violate such a statute—based on the contention that the press had "induced" or "conspired" with a third party to engage in unlawful activity—would violate the First Amendment. As the Supreme Court has recognized on several occasions, a broad range of press conduct that involves "soliciting, inquiring, requesting and persuading" sources "to engage in the unauthorized and unlawful disclosure of information"¹³¹ is protected by the Constitution. A statutory scheme that purports to criminalize such activity, without both specifying and cabining its reach, would be unlikely to survive a constitutional challenge, whether it is analyzed under the First Amendment-based requirement that even a statute that has an incidental impact on protected speech must be "narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest";¹³² under the First Amendment-based "overbreadth" doctrine;¹³³ or under the Fifth Amendment, which "prohibits punishment pursuant to a statute so vague that 'men of common intelligence

Freedom of the Press Foundation Launches SecureDrop, an Open-Source Submission Platform for Whistleblowers

Trevor Timm SExecutive Director

Rainey Reitman YBoard Member, Freedom of the Press Foundation
October 15, 2013

October 15, 2013 San Francisco, CA: Freedom of the Press Foundation has taken charge of the DeadDrop project, an open-source whistleblower submission system originally coded by the late transparency advocate Aaron Swartz. In the coming months, the Foundation will also provide on-site installation and technical support to news organizations that wish to run the system, which has been renamed "SecureDrop."

By installing SecureDrop, news organizations around the world can securely accept documents from whistleblowers, while better protecting their sources' anonymity. Although it is important to note that no security system can ever be 100 percent impenetrable, Freedom of the Press Foundation believes that this system is the strongest ever made available to media outlets. Several major news agencies have already signed up for installations, and they will be announced in the coming weeks.

"We've reached a time in America when the only way the press can assure the anonymity and safety of their sources is not to know who they are," said JP Barlow, co-founder and board member of Freedom of the Press Foundation. "SecureDrop is where real news can be slipped quietly under the door."

Originally created by Swartz in partnership with investigative reporter Kevin Poulsen, SecureDrop is a Python application that accepts messages and documents from the web and encrypts them for secure storage. Each source who uses the platform is assigned a unique codename that lets the source establish a relationship with the news organization without having to reveal her real identity or resort to e-mail.

In addition to installation support, Freedom of the Press Foundation will provide media organizations with instruction on security best practices and long-term technical support. Small media organizations with significant financial need may also apply to Freedom of the Press Foundation for help obtaining hardware. The New Yorker, the first news organization to use the SecureDrop code, through its StrongBox project, will continue to operate its system.

Freedom of the Press Foundation is hiring computer-security specialist James Dolan to help maintain the SecureDrop code, install the system for media organizations, and teach journalists about information security. Dolan previously helped manage the New Yorker's installation of StrongBox, the magazine's version of SecureDrop. He also originally reviewed and hardened the security architecture before the initial launch.

"Journalists are starting to recognize that sophisticated communications security is a key element in the newsgathering process," Freedom of the Press Foundation's Chief Technology Officer Micah Lee said.

"SecureDrop is the safest way we know for an anonymous source to send information to journalists while protecting their identity."

SecureDrop's code has gone through a detailed security audit by a team of University of Washington researchers, led by Alexei Czeskis. Other authors of the audit include renowned security expert Bruce Schneier and Tor developer Jacob Appelbaum. Freedom of the Press Foundation has made a number of updates to SecureDrop based on these findings and will be making a significant investment in continually improving the system.

"A truly free press hinges on the ability of investigative journalists to build trust with their sources," Freedom of the Press Foundation Executive Director Trevor Timm said. "The recent NSA revelations and record number of whistleblower prosecutions under the current administration have shown the grave challenges to this relationship and the lengths governments will go to undermine it. Freedom of Press Foundation is committed ushering in a new era of security for journalists and newsrooms of all sizes."

Freedom of the Press Foundation offers thanks to Poulsen, who developed the original project with Swartz, managed it for the first six months since it went public, and is handing over the reins. Poulsen, who serves as Wired's investigations editor, is advising the Foundation on the transition, and will continue to serve as a journalism consultant on the project.

"The goal in creating this system was to see it implemented in newsrooms far and wide," Poulsen said. "Freedom of the Press Foundation is the perfect organization to do that."

SecureDrop does not record where things come from. • All material is encrypted automatically.

• We read your submissions on secure computers.

Cons You will need to download Tor software to access our SecureDrop system.

If you are being watched, the very act of using Tor may arouse suspicion.

SecureDrop allows you to safely send us messages and documents, and to follow up with us later if you wish. All we get is what you send us, and a codename that allows us to reply to you. SecureDrop records nothing else about you. To prevent interception at our end, we decrypt what you send us on a computer that is kept completely offline.

Get started

On a computer that you are confident is not being monitored, install TorBrowser. Then go to the guardian.com/securedrop and follow the instructions there.

After that

When you first visit our SecureDrop site, take a note of the passphrase that the service generates for you. This phrase allows you to come back as the same source to view replies from us and to correspond securely.

You don't have to give us a way to contact you, but it can be useful for us to be able to do so. It can also help us if you are able to provide some background about what is in the documents, and why you think they might be of interest to us. We can correspond with you on SecureDrop, or you can use SecureDrop to confidentially provide us with other contact information.

SecureDrop is an open source project managed by the Freedom of the Press Foundation.

Encrypted email

Use a tailor-made email account with PGP encryption to help protect your messages and attachments against prying eyes.

Pros

Encrypted emails and documents are protected by both encryption keys and

- passwords. The bad guys would need to know both to read your stuff. You can send long messages and attachments, which is difficult using phone
- apps. It's easy to communicate directly with a specific Guardian journalist.

Cons

PGP requires a bit of technical know-how to set up.

• If you lose your keys or forget your password, you won't be able to read your own communication.

If you plan to write an email to a Guardian journalist about a sensitive matter, look into PGP encryption. Used properly, PGP should make a message or document unreadable to anyone except the person who sent it and the person for whom it was encrypted. You will use a public key that belongs to the person you are writing to, but is freely available on the internet. This key turns your message into an unreadable jumble. Your recipient - and no one else - has a corresponding private key which can unlock messages that were encrypted by their public key.

Get started

Don't use your regular email address. Create a new email account solely for corresponding with the Guardian. Do it on a computer that isn't being monitored, and make sure the sign-up information you provide doesn't tie the account back to you.

If you're using a browser-based service such as Gmail, Yahoo! Mail or GMX webmail, look into Mailvelope for encrypting messages in your browser. Two popular applications for encrypting text and documents, which you can then paste or attach to emails, are Gpg4win for Windows and GPGSuite for Mac.

Once you have installed one of these tools you can use it to create your own PGP keys. Keep your private key and password safe and don't store the two together.

After that

You should encrypt your messages and attachments using both your public key and that of the person you are writing to. All being well, this means that only you and the journalist will be able to decrypt them. You can find Guardian journalists' keys at theguardian.com/pgp.

Information carried with an email message can reveal your IP address. If you don't want the location you'll send from to be traceable, connect to your email service over the Tor network.

Email your encrypted material to us, along with a copy of your public key so we can reply to you also under encryption. Don't encrypt the public key itself.

Remember to log out after sending the message. You may also wish to delete the history of the correspondence from your browser or email software. Keep your computer secure.

Secure FTP

We can provide you with a unique user account to upload documents.

Pros

Very secure (relatively speaking). Good for sending a series of documents over time.

Good for very large document sets (gigabytes).

Cons

You'll need to correspond with us beforehand so we can supply you with access keys and passphrases.

You'll need to know how to use FTP software.

We have a private Secure FTP server that uses password-protected keypair authentication. We can provide you with a unique user account to upload documents. On receipt, these documents are automatically moved to an isolated environment.

Get started

Contact us using one of the other methods to let us know what you want to send us. We will provide you with a keyfile and password, plus instructions for how to access the SFTP site. You will need to install some FTP software such as Cyberduck or FileZilla on a computer. Read up on computer security before sending us anything.

After that

Connect to the site and send us documents, then let us know they've arrived. The documents will disappear from the destination after your transmission is complete. Don't worry: they've just been moved somewhere even more secure. Remember to tidy up on your computer: remove copies of files you don't want lying around etc.

How to use SecureDrop to contact ABC journalists

The ABC has a long history of agenda-setting, public interest journalism that holds the powerful to account. We are bound by our editorial policies to maintain the anonymity of our confidential sources.

SecureDrop is a tool for sources to anonymously submit documents and communicate with our journalists. It is not the only way of securely contacting an ABC journalist, but it is one of the best, and is used by highly respected news organisations internationally.

Using SecureDrop is more complicated than picking up the phone or sending an email, but if you follow the steps carefully you can have a high level of confidence that your communication with ABC journalists is secure.

What should I know before submitting material through SecureDrop?

To protect your anonymity when using SecureDrop, it is essential that you do not use a network or device that can easily be traced back to your real identity. Instead, use public wi-fi networks and devices you control.

Do NOT access SecureDrop on your employer's network.

Do NOT access SecureDrop using your employer's hardware.

Do NOT access SecureDrop on your home network.

DO access SecureDrop on a network not associated with you, like the wi-fi at a library or cafe.

Got it. How can I submit files and messages through SecureDrop?

Once you are connected to a public network at a cafe or library, download and install the Tor Browser.

Launch the Tor Browser. Visit our organisation's unique SecureDrop URL by cutting and pasting this URL http://dqa4zahticcobfq5rmmmbewbdtyiznbl75hu23k4i37y7yfoosrh7mqd.onion/

Follow the instructions you find on our source page to send us materials and messages.

When you make your first submission, you will receive a unique codename. Memorise it. If you write it down, be sure to destroy the copy as soon as you've committed it to memory. Use your codename to sign back in to our source page, check for responses from our journalists, and upload additional materials.

How can I get in contact with a specific journalist or program using SecureDrop?

The ABC journalists checking the SecureDrop inbox are specifically trained to handle sensitive information and investigative stories. If you clearly label the information as being for a journalist or team like ABC Investigations, Four Corners, Background Briefing, 7.30 or your local newsroom, our staff will securely pass on that communication, unless it is not appropriate to do so. An example of when they would not pass the information on to the person specified, is if the journalist no longer works for the ABC.

As a source, what else should I know?

No tool can absolutely guarantee your security or anonymity. The best way to protect your privacy and anonymity as a source is to adhere to best practices.

You can use a separate computer you've designated specifically to handle the submission process. Or, you can use an alternate operating system like Tails, which boots from a USB stick and erases your activity at the end of every session.

A file contains valuable metadata about its source — when it was created and downloaded, what machine was involved, the machine's owner, etc. You can scrub metadata from some files prior to sharing by using the Metadata Anonymisation Toolkit featured in Tails.

Your online behaviour can be extremely revealing. Regularly monitoring our publication's social media or website can potentially flag you as a source. Take great care to think about what your online behaviour might reveal and consider using Tor Browser to mitigate such monitoring.

Our organisation retains strict access control over our SecureDrop project. A select few journalists within our organisation will have access to SecureDrop submissions. We control the servers that store your submissions, so no third party has direct access to the metadata or content of what you send us.

Do not discuss your communications with the ABC, even with trusted contacts.

How to share a story or a tip with Al Jazeera

Is there a story that you think we should cover? Do you have a tip or documents that we should investigate? Here are the best ways to get in touch with our journalists.

Postal address:

Al Jazeera English Attn: Online Department PO Box 23127 Doha - Qatar

Email:

Send us your tip here (https://www.aljazeera.com/contactus/). In the dropdown menu, be sure to choose "General - Editorial"

Important:

Never use email to send us confidential tips or documents that might pose a risk to your safety. Use one of our other options if you have sensitive information you want to share.

We offer the following secure options to get in touch with us if you have confidential information:

WhatsApp

WhatsApp is a free encrypted messaging app, which means only the sender and receiver can read the messages. The app allows you to send text messages, images, videos, audio and text documents. In case messages are intercepted by third parties, they cannot be read because of the encryption the app uses. However, because some information about you as a user is stored on WhatsApp servers (phone numbers, certain types of metadata, including timestamps on messages), the app is not completely anonymous.

If you use WhatsApp to contact us, be aware that you also share your phone number with us. Also make sure your conversations are not backed up in the cloud (iCloud or Google Drive).

Al Jazeera's WhatsApp Number: +974 5080 0207

Download WhatsApp (https://www.whatsapp.com/download)

Signal

Signal is a free messaging app similar to WhatsApp, but it stores less information about its users. Signal only registers your phone number and the last time you used the app. Other metadata like timestamps on messages are not recorded.

Signal also offers the option to send messages that self-destruct after a set time after the message is seen

You will disclose your phone number with us when you send a message.

Al Jazeera's Signal Number: +974 5080 0207

Download Signal (https://signal.org/install)

SecureDrop - http://aljazeerafo4sau2.onion

SecureDrop is an encrypted submission system that is highly recommended if you value both confidentiality and anonymity. Because it uses the Tor network, your identity, location and other information will be protected. SecureDrop allows us to communicate while keeping both parties completely anonymous from each other.

To use SecureDrop, you must:

- Download and install software to access the Tor network: https://www.torproject.org (if this web page is blocked in your country, you can send an email (gettor@torproject.org) or a direct message on Twitter to @get_tor to get a direct download link)
- Once you load the Tor browser, copy and paste the URL http://aljazeerafo4sau2.onion into the Tor address bar. You will then find additional instructions on how to submit files to Al Jazeera.
- A randomly generated, unique code name will be assigned to you. If Al Jazeera wishes to contact you, we will do so in your SecureDrop. These messages can only be accessed using your code name.
- · Using the Tails operating system is recommended to increase security.
- More information on the Tails operating system can be found here. (https://tails.boum.org/)
- More information on SecureDrop can be found https://docs.securedrop.org/en/stable/source.html

Things to consider before sending confidential tips and documents:

It is important to remember that no app or tool is 100 percent safe and secure, and all forms of communication come with risks. To help with security, we recommend you:

- Read the tool or app's terms and conditions, as well as the instructions before using.
- Be aware of the network you use. Do not use your home or work network if you do not want the information to be traced back to you. Using a public wifi network might be preferable to reduce the risk of being identified.
- Remember that your internet and search history can help identify you. A simple Google search with "how to leak documents" could be enough to identify you or put you at risk.
- Downloading the Tor browser could also potentially come with some risks in certain countries.
- Tor does not hide the fact you are using Tor.
- In countries where Tor is not extensively used, it can be easier for users to be identified. In these countries which include several countries outside of Europe and North America you should avoid using networks associated with your identity.
- If possible, do not use your personal or work phones or computers to contact us.
- Encrypt any sensitive information you have stored locally. Find out how and why here (https://ssd.eff.org /en/playlist/want-security-starter-pack#keeping-your-data-safe).
- Use strong passwords on your phone and computer to increase security. If you have sensitive information on your phone, it is best not to use biometric security like fingerprint recognition or FaceID.

More information on password security here (https://ssd.eff.org/en/playlist/want-security-starter-pack#creating-strong-passwords).

A note about using phone communication:

- In general, mobile messaging is not recommended if you want to stay completely anonymous. Phone locations, numbers and identities can potentially be traced to identify you as the source.
- If someone gets access to your phone, they might be able to read any messages if they can unlock your phone. More information on the risks of using mobile phones can be found here (https://ssd.eff.org/en/module /problem-mobile-phones).

We encourage you to assess the potential risks and choose the option that you believe is best for you and the information you're sharing.

We ask that you do not send pitches, press releases or feedback through these channels. While we will check messages regularly, we will not always respond. If we do respond, it will be through the same method by which you contacted us.

Are you a journalist who wants to pitch a story to Al Jazeera? Find out the best way to pitch us your story idea https://medium.com/@ajlabs/how-to-pitch-to-al-jazeera-com-da2f9fe45489).

SecureDrop

Bloomberg maintains a SecureDrop server — a secure communication platform designed to shield your identity. We set up our server in conjunction with the project's maintainers, the Freedom of the Press Foundation to ensure it meets the highest industry standards. We control the SecureDrop server, which stores any information you send us in an encrypted format and if we are compelled to turn over information provided to us via SecureDrop, we won't have anything that would reveal your identity, unless you chose to give us that information.

How to

- Download and install the Tor browser from TorProject.org. Ideally, connect from public Wi-Fi or somewhere that isn't your home or office. Make sure that your computer does not have any malware or spyware that could compromise your anonymity.
- Our address on Tor is: m4hynbhhctdk27jr.onion
- Once the Tor browser has connected, copy and paste that into the address bar and follow the instructions.
- Once you are given a codename, you can begin a correspondence with our reporters or submit information. With this codename, you can come back and log in again to check if our reporters have sent you a message or to submit more information.

For added security, you may wish to connect to Tor on a computer running the TAILS operating system.

Bloomberg

Privacy information

- We don't ask or require you to provide any personally identifying information when you submit materials through SecureDrop. However, please keep in mind that the actual messages you send and receive through SecureDrop may include personally identifying information included by you or the journalist.
- The system does not record your IP address, information about your browser, computer, or operating system.
- The server will only store the date and time of the newest message sent from each source. Once you send a new message, the time and date of your previous message is automatically deleted.
- Journalists decrypt and read each message offline. Journalists will delete messages and any materials submitted through SecureDrop from the server on a regular basis. The date and time of any message will be securely deleted from the server when the message is deleted.
- Once you read a journalist's message, we recommend you delete it. It will then be securely deleted from the file system.
- Also please note that when you submit certain types of files through SecureDrop, you may be sending us metadata associated with that file.
- For example, if you submit a photo through SecureDrop in JPEG format, the file may include information about the date, time, and the GPS location of where it was taken, and the type of device used to take the photo. Similarly, if you submit a Word file (.doc or .docx) through SecureDrop, it may include the identity of the document's author, the author's operating system, GPS data about the author's location, and the date and time when the document was created.

CBC SecureDrop

How to contact CBC anonymously

Due to the COVID-19 pandemic, submissions will take longer than normal to be reviewed.

CBC is serious about protecting sources. We are also serious about providing you the most secure and confidential way to reach us to share sensitive information.

In this day and age, internet traffic can be monitored. SecureDrop is a special method to securely, anonymously contact CBC and our top investigative journalists. SecureDrop will help you establish an anonymous on-line connection, and then help you to send CBC investigative journalists encrypted messages or documents.

Other ways to contact CBC News

If you have feedback, insight, a tip or story idea that doesn't require anonymity there are easier ways to reach our newsrooms across Canada:

https://cbchelp.cbc.ca/hc/en-ca/articles/217732587-Submit-a-news-tip-or-story-for-CBC-to-investigate

What makes a good SecureDrop tip?

CBC News is looking to tell original, compelling and newsworthy Canadian and International stories that are in the public interest. Documents or other evidence can be essential to that.

Please articulate your information clearly and provide relevant names, documents,

How Do I Get Started?

It can seem daunting. But don't worry! We'll walk you through some simple steps. Your decision to use CBC's SecureDrop is yours — and yours alone.

- 1. Use only a computer you control or trust. Don't use a work computer. To prevent someone from snooping on your internet activity, don't go online from home or work. Connect using a network you do not normally use such as a public wi-fi at a restaurant or coffee shop.
- 2. Download and install Tor Browser. This program can prevent others from tracking you on-line as you connect to SecureDrop.
- 3. Once set up, open the program and paste the following address into the Tor Browser address bar:

http://gppg43zz5d2yfuom3yfmxnnokn3zj4mekt55onlng3zs653ty4fio6qd.onion

- 4. We'll provide you with instructions and a randomly generated pass-phrase so that you can communicate anonymously with our journalists and send us documents. Memorize your code, or write it down somewhere secure. You will need the code to log back in to check for replies from us in the future. These messages are the only way we will be able to reach you.
- 5. To learn more about the SecureDrop project please use Tor Browser to connect anonymously to: http://secrdrop5wyphb5x.onion Tip #1: Be patient. Read all instructions first. This on-line system is slower than you may be used to.

Tip #2: Don't access our SecureDrop server from your home or office.

Tip #3: To ensure maximum privacy, create and use a Tails anonymous operating system USB boot key. This ensures no traces of your internet usage will be saved to your computer.

What happens when I send information to CBC's SecureDrop?

Your internet connection to CBC through SecureDrop is anonymous. We don't know who you are — unless you tell us in a message. Your internet address is untraceable.

Your information arrives at CBC encrypted. We download it to a special computer not connected to our regular networks, locked in a restricted, secured room. The information is then read on a computer totally disconnected from the internet.

Only a small group of senior investigative journalists have access to the SecureDrop "in box."

You can send your information "to the attention" of any specific CBC reporter, or simply to "CBC Investigations."

CBC 5 Communication Protecting Sources

Anonymous sources are a vital part of journalism. When we receive leaked information or documents, we must verify their authenticity, corroborate the information they contain, and carefully assess the material before publishing, all according to CBC's Journalistic Standards.

CBC has adopted SecureDrop to enhance our ability to protect sources in order to allow people with important information to come forward and expose matters of public interest. Used correctly, with appropriate security precautions on your own computer, SecureDrop will provide you a much greater level of anonymity and security.

SecureDrop is regularly audited by independent security experts, but like all software, no form of electronic communication can be made 100% secure. Ultimately, use it at your own risk.

Financial Times SecureDrop Privacy Policy

Please read this privacy policy carefully. It explains what information FT's SecureDrop site does and does not collect, and why.

Information you provide

- We don't ask or require you to provide any personally identifying information when you submit materials through SecureDrop.
- The system does not record your IP address, information about your browser, computer, or operating system.
- The SecureDrop pages do not embed third-party content or deliver persistent cookies to your browser.
- The server will only store the date and time of the newest message sent from each source. Once you send a new message, the time and date of your previous message is automatically deleted.
- Journalists decrypt and read each message offline. They are encouraged to delete messages from the server on - a regular basis. The date and time of any message will be securely deleted from the server when the message is deleted.

- Please keep in mind that the actual messages you send and receive through SecureDrop may include personally identifying information. For this reason, once you read a journalist's message, we recommend you delete it. It will then be securely deleted from the file system.
- It is our policy to scrub any metadata from files before publishing them.
 However, we strongly encourage you to consider removing any metadata associated with files you submit.

Data security

How To Share Information With HuffPost

We tell big stories on difficult subjects. We've reported on the inequities of the drug treatment system, deaths in police custody, and a massive bribery scandal involving some of the world's biggest corporations. To tell these stories, we must work with people who know what is really going on inside government and private institutions. That's where you come in.

Are you getting new directives that flout established practice? Are new rules making you uncomfortable? Is an important program on the chopping block? Are you being asked to do something unethical? We want to see whatever evidence and documentation you can provide. Your employer, hackers and the government could potentially read your emails (or at least see that you contacted us). But if that doesn't bother you, email us at scoops@huffpost.com. Need more privacy? If you're concerned that being a source for a story poses a significant risk, take precautions:

Know your risks. No form of communication is 100 percent safe from all observers. Make a plan about what you'll do if the wrong person finds out you contacted us.

Do not contact us from your work computer or phone. Your bosses can track your use of these devices. The same goes for your personal mobile phone, if you've ever installed apps from your employer — even if you later uninstalled them.

Use your browser's "incognito" or "private browsing" mode. Some sites (including, potentially, your employer's) can access your browser history and see what websites you've visited. An incognito window may help mask this data. Open a new incognito browser window to contact us, and close it immediately afterward. If you don't, your browser can display your online history to sites that ask for it.

Another option for contacting HuffPost is SecureDrop, which allows you to share information and communicate with us electronically in a way that protects your identity even from us – as long as you use it correctly. To access SecureDrop, you will need to use Tor Browser to obscure your IP address and computer information. While running Tor Browser, visit HuffPost's SecureDrop page at http://rbugf2rz5lmjbfun.onion and follow the instructions on the site. This will generate a username that will become your login. However, you will still want to take precautions, such as not using internet networks at your home or office. You may also want to consider using Tails, an operating system that doesn't keep records of your activity on your computer. For more information on how to use SecureDrop to connect with us, please visit https://docs.securedrop.org/en/stable /source.html using Tor Browser.

Do not contact us during work hours. You could get into trouble if your employer found out.

If you are concerned you are under active surveillance, do not contact us from home and do not contact us from your regular phone. Public wifi hotspots can help keep you anonymous. Use the $\overline{\text{Tails}}$ operating system and Tor Browser. Start your Tails session immediately before contacting us, and close it immediately afterward. Do not tell others that you are a source, and do not contact us on social media.

If you email us documents, strip document metadata. Metadata can include evidence of where a document originated and who has handled it. Here is information about removal methods.

In many cases, our reporters or editors will eventually need to know your identity so we can verify and authenticate the information you provide to us. We understand the risks that sources may be taking, and can discuss with you any additional steps we can take to protect your anonymity. We will absolutely stand behind any agreement we may make to protect your identity. If you instead feel you must remain completely anonymous, we will ask you to provide us with sources or contacts who can corroborate the information you send us.

What is SecureDrop?

SecureDrop is a way for NBC News viewers and readers to share information with our journalists. It offers more security and anonymity than other ways of sending tips to our journalists.

How do I use it?

SecureDrop relies on Tor, an application designed to encrypt your communications and obscure your computer's IP address. In order to use SecureDrop:

Go to a place with a public Internet connection, one that you don't normally frequent.

Download and install the Tor browser bundle from https://www.torproject.org

Open the Tor browser and copy this url into the browser address bar: https://htikmirac7bzq75o.onion

From this url, you will be able to send messages and files to a secure dropbox that we will check periodically.

You will be provided with a codename that you will use it to log in to check for replies from NBC News.

Keep the codename you are provided safe and secure. We will not know your codename, and you should never share it with anyone. If you forget your codename, we will have no other way to contact you.

What steps are taken to protect my privacy and anonymity?

Nearly all digital communications can leave a trail. NBC News's SecureDrop is designed to minimize these digital trails using best practices, such as:

Limiting collection of information logged about your browser, computer or operating system.

Using Tor to encrypt and anonymize your communications with us.

Using HTTPS. You will notice a certificate bearing our name in your browser in a similar way as you would with other HTTPS websites.

Storing submissions in encrypted form on our systems.

Physically isolating SecureDrop from the rest of our network.

However, no system is 100 percent secure, and even with these measures, there might be a risk of someone discovering who you are or what you are sending.

In addition to using SecureDrop, we recommend that you:

Use a secure computer to communicate with us - one that does not maintain enterprise software or malware that might be used to record your activities.

Use an operating system that helps preserve your privacy and anonymity, such as Tails (https://tails.boum.org).

Delete trails of communication that you store on your computer, such as copies of messages or your secure codename assigned when using the service.

Run any files you sent to us through a metadata-scrubbing tool to minimize the risk of unintentionally sending us information embedded in the documents, such as an author's name.

Legal disclaimer:

NBC News is committed to protecting the identities of our sources and keep the information they give us confidential. We do not make any warranties as to SecureDrop; use of the system is on an "as is" basis, at your own risk.

The New Hork Times

Got a confidential news tip?

Do you have the next big story? Want to share it with The New York Times? We offer several ways to get in touch with and provide materials to our journalists. No communication system is completely secure, but these tools can help protect your anonymity. We've outlined each below, but please review any app's terms and instructions as well. Please do not send feedback, story ideas, pitches or press releases through these channels. For more general correspondence visit our contact page.

What Makes a Good Tip?

A strong news tip will have several components. Documentation or evidence is essential. Speculating or having a hunch does not rise to the level of a tip. A good news tip should articulate a clear and understandable issue or problem with real-world consequences. Be specific. Finally, a news tip should be newsworthy. While we agree it is unfair that your neighbor is stealing cable, we would not write a story about it.

Examples of good tips include:

Here is evidence that this government representative is breaking the law.

Here is proof that this company is conducting itself unethically.

We will be reviewing messages regularly, but cannot promise each will receive an individual response. There are multiple ways to submit tips. Each method provides different levels of protection, so we encourage you to be certain of the pros and cons of the method you choose. We will respond to tips using the same method in which they were submitted. For example, if you submit a tip to us with WhatsApp, we will only respond to you using WhatsApp.

WhatsApp 🧕

WhatsApp is a free messaging app owned by Facebook that allows full end-to-end encryption for its service. Only the sender and recipient can read messages, photos, videos, voice messages, documents and calls. Though you can limit some account information shared to Facebook, WhatsApp still keeps records of the phone numbers involved in the exchange and the users' metadata, including timestamps on messages.

The free and open source messaging app offers end-to-end encryption to send messages, photos, video and calls. Signal retains only your phone number, when you first registered with the service and when you were last active. No metadata surrounding communications is retained. The app also allows messages to self-destruct, removing them from the recipient's and sender's phones (once it's been seen) after a set amount of time.

SecureDrop 📦

This encrypted submission system set up by The Times uses the Tor anonymity software to protect your identity, location and the information you send us. We do not ask for or require any identifiable information, nor do we track or log information surrounding our communication.

We strongly recommend that tips be sent using a public Wi-Fi network, and that the computer you use is free of malware. If the computer is compromised, communications using SecureDrop may be compromised as well. The steps below outline best practices for use of SecureDrop, as well as the steps that we take to protect your privacy.

Details

- Download and install the Tor browser from https://www.torproject.org. The Tor browser allows access to our SecureDrop page, which operates as a Tor "hidden service."
- Open the Tor browser and wait for the page that says a connection has been established, then copy and paste the following into the address bar: https://nyttips4bmquxfzw.onion
- Follow the instructions to send us information. Users will be given a codename that can be used to log back in and check for responses from Times reporters.
- For added security, consider using the Tails operating system instead of the Tor Browser.

Privacy Information

The SecureDrop servers are under the physical control of The New York Times.

The information you send us is stored on our SecureDrop servers in an encrypted format. Before distributing your submission to reporters, we will decrypt your submission on a computer that has never been connected to the internet and remove any metadata associated with it. After it has been stripped of metadata, and, if possible, known source information, tips and submitted documents will be accessible to our editors and reporters. We will not know the source of tips submitted through SecureDrop: If your name or other identifiers are included in the tip itself, it may not be redacted from the information we share with the reporters. If this is a serious concern, we encourage you not to include identifying information within your submission.

How to Contact ProPublica Securely

Our job is to hold people and institutions accountable. It requires evidence.

Have you seen something that troubles you or that you think should be a story? Do you have a tip about something we should be investigating? Do you have documents or other materials that we should see? Below are a few ways to contact us as safely, securely and anonymously as possible.

It is always fastest and most efficient to contact an individual reporter directly. Look at our staff list. Click on our names to see what we've covered. We all include our contact information, including ways to reach us through encrypted apps such as Signal.

If you cannot find the right individual's contact, we do have some newsroom-wide options detailed below. For most of those tips:

- Please fill out our tips form. It helps us read your notes and pass them along to the right editors and reporters quickly. You should also check out our open reporting projects on specific topics and subjects we're already covering.
- You can email us at tips@propublica.org. This is a less efficient and less secure option, but we will get back to you as soon as we can.

Read more about what we look for in tips.

If Your Tip Is Sensitive

Please keep your apps and your phone's operating system up to date. Developers and manufacturers regularly fix vulnerabilities that may affect the security of your phone and your communications with us.

Signal

Signal is a free messaging app for iPhone and Android that provides end-to-end encryption for messages and calls. Signal does not collect any metadata regarding who you are messaging. The service only retains your phone number and the last time you accessed the app.

If you're concerned about someone knowing that you have contacted a journalist, we suggest that you enter the reporter's Signal number directly into the app — don't add it to your address book.

Also: Messaging us on Signal does reveal your phone number to ProPublica. In some situations, you should consider using a separate phone number (such as a Google Voice number) for Signal communications.

Our newsroom's general Signal number is +1-201-701-0850.

PGP

Some reporters use PGP (aka "GPG") for email encryption as noted on their profiles. If you decide to use PGP, be aware that it only encrypts your message content and not the to, from or subject line of your emails. You may also consider registering a new, anonymous email address in combination with PGP.

If Your Tip Is Very Sensitive

Postal Mail

U.S. postal mail without a return address is one of the most secure ways to communicate. Authorities would need a warrant to intercept and open it in transit.

Don't use your company or agency mailroom to send something to us. Mail your package or envelope from an unfamiliar sidewalk box instead of going to a post office. You can mail us paper materials or digital files on, for example, a thumb drive.

Our mailing address is:

ProPublica 155 Avenue of the Americas 13th Floor New York, NY 10013-1507

It's always helpful to address it to a specific reporter. Again, see our staff list.

SecureDrop

ProPublica uses a system called SecureDrop so you can share information and files with us with a level of security and anonymity that is far greater than is possible with other electronic means. Used properly, SecureDrop allows you to correspond with us in a way that shields your identity even from us.

Our SecureDrop server is only accessible using the Tor anonymity software. Although you need to download the Tor Browser to connect to ProPublica's SecureDrop server, it can be as easy to use as a normal web browser.

Do not download and install Tor on a computer that is managed by your workplace. For the best level of privacy, we further recommend that you use Tor and visit our SecureDrop using a public Wi-Fi network, rather than your home or work internet connection.

Here's how to contact us using SecureDrop:

- Visit TorProject.org and follow the directions to download and install the Tor Browser.
- Launch the Tor Browser and allow it to connect. Then wait for a page that says a connection has been established.
- Copy and paste the following into the Tor Browser address bar: http://lvtu6mh6dd6ynqcxtd2mseqfkm7g2iuxvjobbyzpgx2jt427zvd7n3ad.onion/
- Follow the instructions on that website to send us files and messages. When you use the site, you will get a "code name," which is your login for SecureDrop. You can come back and log in with this code name to submit more information and see if we have sent a response to you.

The SecureDrop link http://lvtu6mh6dd6ynqcxtd2mseqfkm7g2iuxvjobbyzpgx2jt427zvd7n3ad.onion/is only accessible via Tor, and we do not recommend using any other website or software to visit our SecureDrop system.

Our SecureDrop servers are under the direct physical control of ProPublica. When you use SecureDrop, we are unable to record your IP address or information about your browser, computer or operating system. All files submitted to our SecureDrop servers are encrypted as they are received; submissions are initially decrypted and viewed on a computer that has never been connected to the internet. Unless you give us your name or other identifying information, we do not know your identity if you submit tips to us through SecureDrop. We use our best effort to remove identifying information and metadata from submissions.

Despite the design of the system, use caution when submitting sensitive information. Consider who may be watching you and be aware of identifiable information contained in your documents. We want you to be safe and to understand the risks you face before you send us anything. And if you're using Tor, you can also read ProPublica more anonymously by using our "onion site" service: https://www.propub3r6espa33w.onion/

For extra security, you can also boot your computer from a USB key containing Tails, a secure operating system that does not leave any trace of your Tails activity on the computer you are using; the Tor Browser is included in the Tails operating system.

What We Look for in Tips

We read every tip that comes to us. But we have to make choices about which ones we explore. Here are some things to keep in mind when you contact us:

- Tell us why your story is an accountability story. Who is being harmed? What, exactly is happening? How would we follow up?
- Our stories are generally about systemic, not individual, harm. If you think your story is part of a pattern, help us understand the larger context.
- Include any evidence you have that shows the harm you're writing about. That includes text messages, emails, documents, receipts, photos, reports, documents and more.
- If something is time-sensitive, please note that in your subject line or introductory text.
- Please be as specific and concise as you can.

SecureDrop at The Globe and Mail

What is it?

The Globe and Mail's SecureDrop service provides a way to share information with our journalists with more security and anonymity than traditional means. The software comes from the Freedom of the Press Foundation, who have worked with other news organizations to provide a safer way for sources to talk to reporters. You can also email our journalists (without anonymity, but with encryption of the contents) using PGP.

Before getting started

To reduce the probability that a third party, such as your employer or a government agency, can tell that you're using SecureDrop, you should connect to it from a network that you don't normally use, such as a public wifi network at a cafe that you've never visited before.

You should also use a computer that you control, because a laptop issued to you by your employer may contain monitoring software that captures keystrokes or tracks the sites that you visit.

It might help you to watch this step-by-step video on how to contact us using SecureDrop. It illustrates many of the principles outlined below.

I'm at a coffee shop with my computer, now

- 3. Follow the instructions provided to upload files and leave messages
- 4. Don't visit any other sites where your identity can be discovered in the same session

You will be allocated a unique code phrase as part of the process. If you want to check for responses later, you will need to use this code phrase. Ideally you will memorize it and not write it down. In any event, keep it safe. You should not contact our journalists in connection with your SecureDrop uploads through any other method, such via social media or email.

SecureDrop provides an anonymous connection to The Globe and Mail, and securely encrypts any files you upload to the service. However, it cannot protect the original files on your own computer, or prevent your computer from being compromised by malware. For added security we recommend using Tails, an operating system that loads from a USB stick and wipes any trace of its use when you shut down your computer. You should also consider encrypting sensitive files on your computer.

How does SecureDrop work?

SecureDrop uses the Tor network to anonymize your interactions with us. It provides a Tor hidden service, hosted on computers isolated from our main internal network and under our physical control. Files and messages uploaded to this service are encrypted using PGP, and can only be decrypted by our journalists on a dedicated air-gapped decryption station also and the many mail's control.

e uploaded for the attention of any of our all number of senior investigative reporters have tation. After uploads have been decrypted, they intended journalist, who will treat them data.

What protection do I have as a source if I use SecureDrop?

The Globe and Mail does not log any of your interactions with the SecureDrop system, including your visit to this page. It installs no tracking cookies or tracking software of any kind on your computer as part of the process. Your identity is not exposed to us during the upload process, and we do not know your unique code phrase. This means that even if a code phrase is compromised, we cannot comply with demands to provide documents that were uploaded by a source with that code phrase. SecureDrop itself is an open-source project that is subject to regular security audits, reducing the risk of bugs that could compromise your information.

Information provided through SecureDrop is handled appropriately by our journalists. Journalists working with uploaded files are required to use only computers with encrypted hard drives and follow security best practices. Anonymous sources are a critical element of journalism, and The Globe and Mail has always protected its sources to the best of its abilities. In most circumstances, there will be no need to require any information from you. However, there may be times when a Globe and Mail journalist might seek your permission to meet before certain information is published. The use of anonymous sources is governed by our Editorial Code of Conduct.

Confidential Tips

Maximize your data security

The Washington Post offers several ways to securely send information and documents to Post journalists. No system is 100% secure, but these tools attempt to create a more secure environment than that provided by normal communication channels. Please review the fine print before using any of these tools so you can choose the best option for your communication needs. In addition to using one of these tools, we recommend that you:

Use a secure computer to communicate with us—one that does not maintain enterprise software or malware that might be used to record your activities;

Use an operating system that helps preserve your privacy and anonymity, such as Tails;

Delete trails of communication that you store on your computer, such as copies of messages or your secure codename assigned when using the service;

Run any files you send to us through a metadata-scrubbing tool to minimize the risk of unintentionally sending us information embedded in the documents, such as an author's name

Here's how to share sensitive leaks with the press

During this deadly pandemic, our medical professionals have all witnessed abuse and mismanagement that needs to be brought to public attention. Workers of all backgrounds are being asked to put their lives at risk for their employers. Likewise, many people in government and the private sector are feeling concerned that they or their colleagues may be required to do something unethical or illegal, and speaking up can lead to negative consequences for their livelihood or freedom.

Giving tips to journalists can be risky, and may violate previous legal agreements with your organization, such as a non-disclosure agreement or contract. But sometimes, it can also be an effective and courageous way to call attention to abuses.

This guide describes basic steps for minimizing potential risk when sharing sensitive information with a news organization. We want to be clear that no piece of software, nor security recommendation will be 100% effective, and the decision to blow the whistle may invite scrutiny or retaliation. At the same time, it may be a choice that drives necessary institutional change. Before reaching out to the press, think carefully about what you can do to minimize that risk, and stay as safe as possible.

Before moving ahead, do you have a strong tip?

A good tip requires clear evidence, and should be the basis for a story that the broader public should know about.

Whether or not you have evidence, the broader public might not need to know that a neighbor refuses to pick up after her dog on the morning walk. Allegations of corruption or illegality among public officials are certainly newsworthy, but those claims will not make it into a published story without verifiable evidence.

Who are you concerned about, and what can they do?

Think about the sensitivity of the information you're sharing, and who might be willing to investigate the source of the leak. What are the organization's capabilities? What resources (e.g., attention, legal, financial, technical resources) can they invest in discovering the source? And how likely do you think it is that they will actually investigate?

If you share information about a large, well-resourced organization that requires discretion from employees, such as a government agency, it may have enormous legal, financial, and technical resources available for investigating a leak. If you're sharing information about a small organization, such as a local restaurant that muzzles workers, its resources are much more constrained and it may not have the capacity or willingness to investigate. Proceed accordingly.

Proceeding with caution

First, be cautious about behaviors that could make you readily identifiable as a source.

Keep all of your tipping activities outside the view of your organization. For essentially everyone, that means no calling from work, no emailing from a work email address, and staying off work devices or wireless networks for any leaking activities.

It's common for well-resourced organizations to keep logs of employees' activities on their devices and online activities. If you work at a large organization and you're reading this article on a workplace device or wi-fi network, chances are your workplace already has a log that you've accessed this page. Similarly, visiting a news organization's tip page (e.g., https://www.nytimes.com/tips) may be logged by your workplace. This is why it's so important to keep your leaking activities on devices and networks that your workplace doesn't control.

Has your workplace ever required you to install monitoring software (or software of any kind) on your device? If so, you probably don't want to use this device for any whistleblowing activities.

Be cautious about giving tips on anything that only you could know, or materials that only you could access. Only share these kinds of materials if you think the increased risk of being caught is worthwhile, or if you feel you have a strong moral obligation to do so.

If you are the only one at your organization surfacing a specific grievance, and information about that grievance is later reported by the press, it may give your organization a strong hint about who shared the information.

Don't tell anyone about your leaking activities, except in cases where you may want legal advice from a practicing lawyer.

Tactics for minimizing risk

Minimize the risk of a tip being tied to you, and potentially in your continued communications with reporters. There are a lot of ways to do that.

- Send your materials through physical mail. You can mail electronic documents (e.g., on an SD card) or physical documents through ordinary mail. Be warned: the U.S. postal service takes pictures of the exterior of physical mail. So don't use a return address that is associated with you, and mail it in from a sidewalk mailbox in a location you don't usually frequent. If you have a particular reporter you want to look into your story, copy them on the envelope.
- Call from a phone number unconnected to you. For example, go to a business you don't usually go to, and ask to use their phone. You can also buy a cheap cell phone and prepaid phone card that cannot be traced back to you, but know this involves several careful steps: You must pay with cash, and if your organization can have access to phone location records, it's best to only turn on the phone in locations unassociated with you. That also means using the phone in locations separate from your permanent phone. If you can, remove the battery when it's not in use.
- Use Signal for private messaging. Signal is a free and open source, secure messaging app for iPhones and Android devices. Signal gives you free end-to-end encrypted messages and phone calls. Signal only retains your phone number, your signup date, and when you were last active. Compare this to WhatsApp, which we do not recommend because the service keeps data about users'

contacts. In Signal, you can also make messages self-destruct for everyone in the conversation automatically after a set amount of time. This makes it significantly harder (but not impossible) to eavesdrop on your conversations. If you want help getting started, read this beginner-friendly guide on using Signal.

Note that Signal requires both users to share their phone numbers. When reaching out to journalists, consider registering Signal with a number that your organization is unlikely to connect to you, and understand that Signal is not designed to facilitate complete anonymity.

- Before looking into news organizations, consider using the Tor Browser for greater privacy. Tor Browser is a modified version of Firefox. Tor encrypts and tunnels your web traffic within a global network of computers before connecting you to your final destination. When you access a website through Tor (e.g., Amazon.com) you will appear to connect from a remote location – likely another country. Again, don't use a work device or network for this kind of research.
- Use a whistleblower submission system. Tools such as SecureDrop can provide protection by allowing you to share documents and communications through an anonymous and encrypted dropbox.

More technical, but more secure: SecureDrop

A growing number of news organizations are using SecureDrop to allow sources to reach out and share files or communications anonymously (e.g., The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Intercept, The Guardian). With SecureDrop, not even the news organization knows who you are unless you choose to tell them.

You can access a news organization's SecureDrop page through Tor Browser.

People on your network can't see what you're doing on Tor, but it's still possible to tell that you're using Tor. With that in mind, do not use it at work. For greater security, consider using Tor Browser only over a wi-fi network in a location that is not tied to you (e.g., a coffee shop you don't normally visit) and pay with cash.

As opposed to a ".com" web address, you get to SecureDrop through a unique .onion web address, which can only be accessed through Tor.

Using SecureDrop is fairly easy

- 1. Follow the directions to download the Tor Browser at torproject.org and install it.
- 2. Launch the Tor Browser application.
- 3. Click the shield icon in the top corner > Advanced Security Settings...> Safest
- 4. Within Tor Browser, navigate to the SecureDrop directory and search for your preferred news organization: securedrop.org/directory.
- 5. Find the .onion URL for your preferred publication (e.g., the New York Times: securedrop.org/directory/new-york-times), then copy and paste it into the address bar in Tor Browser.
- 6. From here, you can leave messages and files that the news organization will check from time to time.
- 7. You will be given a random "codename" for continued conversation with the news org. Keep this information safe, and don't share it with anyone. If you lose your codename, they can't reach you any more.

(For more technically-adept users, consider accessing SecureDrop through an operating system designed for privacy and anonymity such as Tails.)

Reporters generally take their commitment to protecting your identity very seriously, and will do everything in their power to fight potential legal requests for identifying information about you. But often, it's even safer not to give your identity if you don't have to. Keep in mind that journalists prefer to have proof of your claims, and information to demonstrate your identity is a part of that.

Dealing with file metadata

Sharing information may be less risky than sharing documents, because they can be embedded with information about the file, which we call metadata. For example, if you create a .docx file, it may have identifying information about you embedded in the file. Consider carefully whether you really need to share files or just the information.

To deal with hidden metadata, rather than sending the file itself, consider taking a picture of a document with an old-fashioned camera (not a smartphone), or take a screenshot of the document. On most operating systems, screenshots come with little useful metadata. For more technical users, you can find metadata removal tools here.

Where do you find a news organization's contact details? First, be careful where you reach out.

The Freedom of the Press Foundation maintains a list of organizations that support the secure communications practices outlined above, and how you can contact them. This is becoming standard, and news organizations looking for great tips will follow suit.

Avoid tip pages that use unsecured HTTP instead of (secured) HTTPS. You might wonder, what's the difference? With HTTP, network eavesdroppers can see which pages you're visiting, while with HTTPS, they can't.

The Freedom of the Press Foundation hosts a directory of SecureDrop and secure tip pages for dozens of news organizations around the world. Whether you want to reach out to the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Guardian, the Intercept, or others, you can find their information here: https://securedrop.org/directory (We would not recommend investigating this at work.)

Sharing information with the press is not always an easy decision, but your information can help to hold powerful people and institutions accountable. Move ahead with a strong understanding of your organization's capabilities and how to share tips safely.

The International Consortium of Investigative Journalists encourages whistleblowers to securely submit all forms of content that might be of public concern - documents, photos, video clips as well as story tips. We accept all information that relates to potential wrongdoing by corporate, government or public service entities in any country, anywhere in the world. We do our utmost to guarantee the confidentiality of our sources.

SecureDrop

SecureDrop is an open-source whistleblower submission system supported by the Freedom of the Press Foundation. Contacting us through our encrypted SecureDrop server is a way to share documents and messages with ICIJ that allows you to protect your identity, even from us.

When you use our SecureDrop service, we will not collect any identifying information from you (like your IP address, location, or browser details). All information you provide will be stored encrypted, and will only be decrypted on an air-gapped machine that never connects to any networks.

There are a number of precautions you can and should take to protect yourself before using our SecureDrop system. The below instructions represent the minimum requirements in order to access our SecureDrop service:

- Download and install the Tor browser (or, for additional protection, use the Tails operating system, which includes Tor by default)
- 2. Navigate to the following onion URL: http://lzpczap7l3zxu7zv.onion
- 3. Follow the instructions to connect and communicate with us. You will be provided with a secret, unique code name that you should memorize or store securely in order to access our replies.

Promoting Your SecureDrop Instance

At Freedom of the Press Foundation, we've found news organizations that get the most out of SecureDrop are those who promote it regularly and effectively. SecureDrop will only be used by sources if they know it exists, so it's best to promote its use in a variety of ways so that a wide swath of people will see it.

So here are a few tips used by some of the news outlets that have seen the most success with SecureDrop.

Make a High Profile Announcement

Anytime you launch a SecureDrop, you'll want to write an accompanying news story along with it to alert your readers and potential sources where to submit information. Almost every news organization already does this, but some good recent examples come from USA Today, The Guardian, and Wired. You can also write a companion Q & A like the Washington Post did.

However, a launch announcement is really just a small piece of the puzzle. It's important to regularly remind readers and potential sources that your SecureDrop exists, because only a tiny fraction will likely see the launch announcement and it will quickly be buried in other news after a couple of days.

Provide a Clear Link on Your Homepage

Making your SecureDrop or secure tips page easy to find is one of the most important things you can do to ensure that potential sources use it. The best way you can do this is providing a clear link on your home page, so that every time a user goes to your website, they can quickly see where they need to go.

For example, the Intercept has a "become a source" link in its main menu:

The Washington Post has a link on their front page for "how to share a tip securely":

Other news organizations put a little link in their footer, however, we've found that this is not as effective as putting it in a more prominent on your front page.

Provide Links at the Bottom of Your Articles

Another great way to remind potential sources know that they can use SecureDrop is to put a link at the bottom of each article. For example, Gizmodo Media Group, uses a message like this:

Promoting Your SecureDrop Instance — SecureDr... https://docs.securedrop.org/en/latest/getting_the... Have something you think we should know? Email us at tips@deadspin.com, call our confidential tips hotline at (347) 746-8471, or contact our writers directly, or use our SecureDrop system. You can also follow us on Twitter, like us on Facebook, and sign up for our newsletter!

Create an Instructional Video on How to Access and Use Your SecureDrop

To better help potential sources visualize how SecureDrop works, several organizations have made short instructional videos walking through all the steps. Some good examples include the Toronto Globe and Mail, The Intercept, and Lucy Parsons Labs.

Regularly Share Your SecureDrop Landing Page on Social Media

The majority of adults in the United States now get their news from Facebook or other social media sites like Twitter, so it's important to regularly remind people via social media posts that SecureDrop is the safest way they can contact your journalists if they have a sensitive tip to share. If there's specific stories you are looking for tips on that may already be in the news, this is a great way of getting added attention to your SecureDrop.

Do you have a tip for us that requires anonymity and security? Send it via SecureDrop: nyer.cm/4qAWxY6

Target Potential Whistleblowers with Advertising

Facebook and Twitter also allow for targeted advertising to users in specific locations, attributes, and sometimes even specific users. For example, Gizmodo Media Group targeted online advertisements for their secure tips page at DC residents imploring them to tell on trump. At Freedom of the Press Foundation, we ran a proof of concept Twitter advertisement aimed at EPA and NOAA employees to show how it can be done. You can read about how you can do the same thing here.

Put an Advertisement in Your Physical Paper

Obviously this tip only applies to news outlets that also print a physical newspaper, but putting an ad or in the paper to tell readers where to go to access SecureDrop can be extremely effective.

The New York Times took out a full page ad in their own paper when they launched SecureDrop and other secure communications tools for their tips line:

So excited and proud to see @nytimes run a full page ad letting readers know how to securely send tips.

And the Toronto Globe and Mail regularly puts a note in their physical paper reminding potential sources where they can go:

Canadian news organization @globeandmail includes the URL to its @SecureDrop landing page in the printed paper:

LEVIN REPORT

ERIC TRUMP SCANDALIZED TO DISCOVER JOURNALISTS USE EMAIL

The president's son was apparently appalled by the tactic.

BY BESS LEVIN
SEPTEMBER 6, 2019

BY BEN NELMS/BLOOMBERG VIA GETTY IMAGES.

ric Trump has seen a lot of shit in his life, but as of Friday at 4:03 p.m. ET, he can officially say he'd seen it all. That was shortly after he viewed an email sent to a Trump Organization employee by reporter

David Fahrenthold that will forever change the way he looks at the world. Once a bright-eyed optimist who believed in the integrity of the press, Eric will never look at the media the same way again, after witnessing firsthand the dirty tactics employed by the fourth state.

What did the younger of the president's adult sons see that so shook him to his very core? Was it blackmail? The offer of sex for information? The violation of source's previously agreed upon anonymity? None of the above. Rather, it was something so much worse:

https://twitter.com/EricTrump/status/1170065011634581504

Yes, Eric Trump, 35, was scandalized to read an exceedingly polite email from a respected journalist engaging in basic reporting and best practices for source-building, i.e. offering the would-be source ways to get in touch with him. The horror! It's the sort of thing from which a grown man may never recover. Eric, of course, is used to a very different kind of journalism, the sort in which people like Donald Trump invent fake personas and speak to reporters pretending to be other people, lie about basic facts to inflate their reputation, and coordinate with tabloids who pay for and suppress stories of alleged sexual affairs that would make them look bad. But this Fahrenthold business? Appalling.

Of course the Trump campaign is profiting off of Sharpiegate

What would a week of manic tweets from the president insisting he was totally right even though he was clearly wrong about the threat of Hurricane Dorian be without branded merchandise?

Donald Trump's re-election campaign has added a Trump-branded permanent marker to its web store, capitalizing on the Sharpiegate drama and expanding the campaign's culture-war offerings that already include stick-it-to-the-liberals plastic straws.

The marker, announced on Twitter this morning by campaign manager Brad Parscale, is the latest effort by the campaign to amplify and then commodify what could have been a relatively minor controversy.... It's an apparent reference to the consternation that's spread this week over Trump's use of a Sharpie-altered weather map on Wednesday to back up his dubious claim that Alabama had been at dire risk of being hammered by Hurricane Dorian.

"Buy the official Trump marker, which is different than every other marker on the market, because this one has the special ability to drive @CNN and the rest of the fake news crazy!" Parscale tweeted because, much like his boss, he's a sad, sad man.

Ivanka Trump still believes Jared Kushner is going to bring peace to the Middle East

Sure, the political part of the plan has yet to be released; the economic one has been described as "the Monty Python sketch of Israeli-Palestinian peace initiatives"; the White House's Middle East envoy just quit and his replacement was fetching Jared Kushner coffee as recently as two years ago, but Ivanka thinks her husband's got this thing in the bag:

While in Argentina on Thursday, first daughter Ivanka Trump responded to the sudden resignation news of the administration's Middle East envoy, Jason Greenblatt, by talking up the peace plan that Greenblatt played a heavy role in designing along with her husband, Jared Kushner. Asked if Greenblatt's departure would affect the yet-to-be-released Middle East peace plan, Trump replied to Bloomberg senior White House reporter Jennifer Jacobs: "No." The president's daughter and senior White House adviser said Greenblatt's exit had been planned "for some time" and that his job was hard on his six children.

"We love Jason, so he's always additive to the team," Trump said. "But the plan's in a great place." Trump declined to comment further, telling Jacobs it was the "wrong trip."

She'll comment further at a time TBD, okay?

Like all software, SecureDrop may contain security bugs. Use at your own risk. Powered by SecureDrop 0.3.10.

Over forty news organizations use SecureDrop, including the New York Times, Washington Post, Pro Publica, the Intercept.

As the true nature of Donald Trump's reasons for firing the FBI director come to light, it's clear that leaks and whistleblowing have never been more important to investigative journalism. But getting that essential information to the press can be risky.

Sources can use SecureDrop, our open source whistleblower submission system which is now in over forty major news organizations worldwide, but there's still the challenge of making sure readers and would-be whistleblowers know that news organizations support it.

Some organizations have SecureDrop links on their front page, or links to instructions for sending in secure tips. But news organizations can take an additional step to get SecureDrop instructions in front of the people who most need to see them. To demonstrate how it can be done on Twitter, we designed an advertising campaign last month that specifically targeted EPA and NOAA employees in the Washington, D.C. area, urging them to leak newsworthy documents to one of the dozens of news organizations that currently use SecureDrop.

Ours is not the first such effort. The investigations team at Gizmodo Media Group recently announced that it was running targeted Facebook ads at government employees in Washington, D.C., imploring them to visit their SecureDrop landing page at TellOnTrump.com. In the interest of transparency, we wanted to see if we could do the same thing on Twitter — Trump's preferred platform — and lay out the steps for news organizations who want to follow suit.

Below, we describe how we went about targeting potential whistleblowers with advertising. We are providing these instructions so other news outlets can run a similar campaign. Any news organization can do this, whether they are interested in whistleblowers from inside the government, corporations like Facebook or Uber, or any entity in between.

How we created a Twitter ad for potential whistleblowers

In our case, we chose to target employees of the EPA and NOAA that work at the headquarters of each agency in the Washington, D.C area. Fortunately, each of these organizations, like many public agencies, makes a directory of its staff available to the public. Neither agency's search service would show the full list of employees, but it's straightforward to craft a set of search terms that will eventually produce the full list. By doing that, we were able to create a directory of thousands of names of employees.

This marks our first data integrity issue: our list of employees is only as good as the publicly available staff directory. If targeting integrity is more important for your purposes, it might be possible to procure an updated list through a FOIA request or an internal directory.

We knew that we could use Twitter's "tailored audience" feature to serve an ad to a list of known usernames. So as our next step, we sought to find the Twitter accounts of employees who use the service. This is more art than science, but we had a concrete goal in mind; the "tailored audience" feature requires at least 500 accounts. Armed with our list of names, we wrote a script to search Twitter for matching accounts and then filter for those who had "EPA" or "NOAA" in their bio or provided a location in or around Washington, D.C. This approach produces some false positives — other District residents with the same names as EPA employees, for example — but the cost of those false positives is small, so long as the intended targets are presented with the message.

Again, if narrowly tailoring the targets is more important for your purposes, you could start with known Twitter accounts and step through their follower graphs. If you want to cast a wider net, you could target the followers of a given account, or "lookalikes" for a set of known employees. For our purposes, the broad cross-section provided by searching for names and filtering by location and bio text is appropriate. We ended up with about 700 names.

Finally, we needed to create the message to serve to the potential leakers. We wanted to communicate the value of leaking and provide information to interested employees, all in a way that keeps prospective whistleblowers as safe as possible. To that end, we decided to use a little bit of text inside a photo to tell people to use their own computers on trusted networks to download Tor and access the SecureDrop directory, and we decided not to include a link that might tempt them to do otherwise.

Newsrooms or journalists could craft more specific messages. Similar campaigns can also be run on Facebook or other social media services. Our campaign, as a proof of concept, didn't need to do that. Our aim was to ensure that those government employees who cannot ignore their conscience's directive or their patriotic duty to blow the whistle know that there are (relatively) safe options available to them.

Gizmodo Ads Target Potential Trump Leakers

Facebook ads steer government agency employees to TellOnTrump.com, which explains how to securely send tips and documents

With the Trump administration proving to be a leaky ship in its early days, one news outlet is launching an ad blitz to find the next Deep Throat.

The Gizmodo Media Group's investigative team has taken to buying highly-targeted Facebook FB 0.46% ▲ ads to steer potential leakers to a new website, TellOnTrump.com, which lays out a variety of secure methods to pass on sensitive information.

"One thing we know about Donald Trump is that there are a lot of things Donald Trump doesn't want people to know about. If you've reached this page, you might have information about the conduct of Donald Trump or his administration that you'd like people to know about. Here's how you can tell us," the site explains.

The Univision Communications Inc.-owned media group, which operates sites like Fusion and the former Gawker Media sites like Gizmodo, Deadspin and Jezebel, started running ads on the social media platform within the last week that specifically target people who list certain government agencies as their employers. The ads don't specify which news outlet is running the campaign, but the site which the ads point to clearly identifies the Gizmodo special projects desk.

"We are targeting people who are employed by federal agencies because we want them to know that if they see or know about something they think is newsworthy, we are here for them," said John Cook, Gizmodo's head of investigations.

Mr. Cook said Gizmodo is also working to purchase bus shelter ads near certain government agencies in Washington, D.C., encouraging people to contact them with information about the Trump administration.

The ads encouraging people to securely and anonymously send tips and documents come as Mr. Trump continues to lash out at the news media and the intelligence community. At a news conference Wednesday, Mr. Trump blasted intelligence agencies, saying: "papers are being leaked, things are being leaked, it's criminal action, criminal act, and it's been going on for a long time."

Gizmodo's efforts certainly aren't the first time that the increasingly granular targeting ability of Facebook's advertising has been used in such a specific way. Hyper-targeted political ads were abundant in the run up to the elections. And marketers, public relations companies and advertising agencies have increasingly used social media to place messages in front of journalists and media professionals in an effort to gain coverage for their clients.

Obama Administration Proves Why the Public Needs Someone to Leak the CIA Torture Report

Trevor Timm yExecutive Director
May 6, 2014

It's now been over a month since the Senate Intelligence Committee voted to force the Obama administration to declassify parts of the Committee's landmark report on CIA torture, and the public still has not seen a word of the 6,000 page investigation.

Despite both the White House and CIA promising a quick declassification review, Politico reported this week that the White House and CIA are now refusing to even answer questions as to when the report will be sent back to the Intelligence Committee for release. Senator Dianne Feinstein said, "I would hope that it would be short and quick. That may be a vain [effort]." Senator Dick Durbin said, "I don't know what the reason is [for the delay]."

Sadly, it was quite predictable that the White House and CIA would delay the release of a report, which is reportedly devestating in its criticism of the CIA, and will remind the public that the Obama administration refused to hold anyone at the CIA accountable for its crimes. Disturbingly, the CIA itself—the same agency the report accuses of years of prisoner abuse and systematic lying—is in charge of the redaction process for the report, despite the fact that it has already dragged its feet for over a year, has been accused of misleading the Senate Intelligence Committee, and even allegedly spied on its staffers all in an apparent attempt to prevent the report from seeing light.

The UN Special Rappateur on Torture, Juan Mendez—himself a survivor of torture—recently wrote that the CIA's role in the process "a preposterous conflict of interest," lamenting that "[o]nce again, the torturers will have the opportunity to censor what the public can know."

The silence and delay by the US government is all the more reason why the CIA Torture Report should be leaked to the public. Of course, we wish that the official transparency process was not broken, and that the report would go through a fair and quick declassification review. But unfortunately, time and again, the administration has prevented information about government wrongdoing from coming out through official channels.

Last week was the tenth anniversary of the release of the Abu Gharib photos, the first hint the American public received about the torture committed by the US government under the Bush administration. Notably, the public saw these photos only because they were leaked to the press, just like much of the information we would later learn about the CIA's torture program.

Unfortunately, in recent years the Justice Department has prosecuted a record number of news sources, and Sen. Feinstein, the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, has led the charge for more. Worse, Sen. Feinstein—despite advocating for the release of the torture report—has said she's already referred a leak related to an article by McClatchy about the torture report's findings to the Justice Department.

The government's crackdown against leaks is one reason why Freedom of the Press Foundation has helped news organizations install SecureDrop, an open-source whistleblower submission system that helps sources get documents to journalists in a much more anonymous and secure way than email. Currently, journalists at five major news organizations in the United States use SecureDrop. If a potential source wants to use it, they need to follow these simple steps:

- 1. Find a public wifi internet connection that is not connected to your work or home, such as a coffee shop.
- 2. Download, install, and load the Tor Browser Bundle (or for more security, the Tails operating system).
- 3. Using the Tor Browser, enter in your news organization's onion URL (see below). Remember: only attempt to load this URL inside the Tor Browser.
- 4. Follow the instructions on the SecureDrop screen.

Here are onion URLs of the five groups of journalists at major US news organizations currently operating SecureDrop:

The Intercept: y6xjgkgwj47us5ca.onion

ProPublica: pubdrop4dw6rk3aq.onion

New Yorker: strngbxhwyuu37a3.onion

Forbes: bczjr6ciiblco5ti.onion

Wired's Kevin Poulsen: poulsensqiv6ocq4.onion

Of course nothing can guarantee 100% security, and sadly any government official would be taking a great personal risk by leaking anything, including the torture report, to journalists. But it increasingly looks like the public will need a brave official willing to take a courageous stand if we are to get real transparency and accountability anytime soon.

Leak the CIA report: it's the only way to know the whole truth about torture

Trevor Timm

Unless, of course, you think spies redacting 6,300 pages of their own sins is transparency. Look how much leaks told us this week

Sat 5 Apr 2014 12.30 BST

n a seemingly rare win for transparency, headlines blared on Thursday that the Senate Intelligence Committee had voted to declassify key findings of its massive report on CIA torture. Unfortunately, most news articles waited until the final two paragraphs to mention the real news: the public won't see any of the document for months at minimum, and more than 90% of the investigation - characterized as "the Pentagon Papers of the CIA torture program" - will remain secret indefinitely.

In reality, only the executive summary and its conclusions - 480 out of some 6,300 pages - were even included in the vote, and they're nowhere close to being published: it now heads to the White House for "declassification review", an arduous process that will involve multiple government agencies taking a black marker to the documents, including the CIA, the same agency accused in the report of systematically torturing prisoners and lying about it for years. The spy report's subjects and suspects will now become its censors.

It's possible the only way the public will ever get to see the entire landmark report is the same way we've learned everything we know about it: if someone leaks it.

Leaks have been critical to the public knowledge of Bush-era torture since the first hints of Abu Ghraib, and as longtime torture investigator Katherine Hawkins noted, "The Senate report would likely never have existed ... if it were not for previous investigations by journalists and non-governmental organizations."

As with many of Edward Snowden's NSA revelations, those who study the issues have known many of the horrid details for years, but often times only when the general public sees government misdeeds – in the government's own words – do we get anywhere close to real accountability.

Despite its inherent secrecy, the contours of the CIA report's findings have slowly become public, thanks to a steady flow of leaks already coming from various government officials in the past seven days.

The Associated Press disclosed on Sunday that the report concludes torture "provided no key evidence in the hunt for Osama bin Laden", despite statements to the contrary from former government officials like Dick Cheney.

The Washington Post published some more details on Monday, including that the CIA used FBI intelligence gained through humane interrogation - then laundered it through the torture program to justify torturing even more - and that officials continued to order torture on prisoners after they had no more information to give.

The next day, McClatchy reported that the investigation includes the horrid details of at least five suspects to die in CIA custody, including "the death of Gul Rahman, an Afghan who was shackled, doused with cold water and left in a cold cell partially clothed until he died of hypothermia", and "Manadal al Jamadi, who reportedly died after he was hung in a crucifixion-like pose and his head had been covered with a plastic bag."

Sadly, it's possible we may not have gotten to this week's big vote at all if it wasn't for a bureaucratic war of leaks that made its way from the halls of Langley all the way to the theater of the Senate floor. A month ago, McClatchy first revealed that the Senate Intelligence Committee suspected the CIA of spying on the computers it used to conduct its investigation. The CIA countered with leaks of its own, claiming that Senate staffers somehow breached a computer firewall to steal documents they shouldn't have. All that led Sen Dianne Feinstein - normally the intelligence community's most ardent defender - to give a blistering speech that excoriated the CIA for spying on its overseers then lying about it afterward.

The US government insists leaking is a crime, even insinuating it's a form of treason. But CIA brass have always egregiously capitalized on leaks to the media more than anyone, while hypocritically clamping down on anyone who leaked information that didn't fit its narrative.

Minutes after the intel committee's vote became final on Thursday afternoon, McClatchy posted a more detailed account of the report's 20 findings, including that the CIA repeatedly leaked classified information over the years to the media to manipulate the public's view on torture. This seems to echo what Nancy Pelosi said last month: "You don't fight [the CIA] without a price, because they come after you, and they don't always tell the truth about it."

Nothing sums up their deplorable attitude better than another episode flying under the radar this week: former CIA director Leon Panetta indisputably leaked classified information to the Zero Dark Thirty filmmakers, however, only the people who may have leaked the information that Panetta leaked information are under investigation – and now the intelligence agency's internal whistleblower advocate may lose his security clearances.

As Marcy Wheeler has noted, torture advocates are allowed a free hand to go on book tours, exposing the greatness of torture, while torture critics like former FBI agent Ali Soufan are usually muzzled, or worse. Of course, no government official has ever been prosecuted for torture, but former CIA officer John Kiriakou is in jail for speaking to the press about it.

Still, the larger question remains: will the White House live up to its word and tell us the truth about torture?

President Obama has stated he wants the findings declassified in an expedient manner, but he quickly defended the CIA when it was accused of spying on the Senate, and as McClatchy reported, "the White House has been more involved than publicly acknowledged ... For five years, the White House has been withholding more than 9,000 top-secret documents sought by the committee for its investigation, even though Obama hasn't exercised a claim of executive privilege."

"The CIA will carry out the review expeditiously," said CIA director John Brennan, a man allegedly complicit in the torture regime as a Bush administration official, who multiple Senate Intelligence Committee members have accused of dragging his feet and misleading the Committee about the report.

Those with access to the report have several options to make it public, even if the CIA redacts the documents. The Senate can still release the full summary afterward, as the Justice Department admitted in court documents. A Senator can use the Constitution's Speech and Debate clause to read the full, classified report into the record, as Sen Mike Gravel did with the Pentagon Papers in 1971. And journalist Jason Leopold has filed a Freedom of Information Act suit against the Justice Department for the copy of the report in their possession, which could further compel its release if the government complies.

But all of those scenarios are farfetched. Parts of the report are now in the hands of Senate staffers, White House officials, State Department employees, CIA spooks and soon maybe more. It would not come without great personal risk, but the American people may only be served well if someone with a conscience is brave enough to leak the full report and hold the CIA accountable for its crimes once and for all.

Since you're here ...

... we have a small favour to ask. Millions are flocking to the Guardian for quality news every day. We believe everyone deserves access to factual information, and analysis that has authority and integrity. That's why, unlike many others, we made a choice: to keep Guardian reporting open for all, regardless of where they live or what they can afford to pay.

As an open, independent news organisation we investigate, interrogate and expose the actions of those in power, without fear. With no shareholders or billionaire owner, our journalism is free from political and commercial bias - this makes us different. We can give a voice to the oppressed and neglected, and stand in solidarity with those who are calling for a fairer future. With your help we can make a difference.

We're determined to provide journalism that helps each of us better understand the world, and take actions that challenge, unite, and inspire change - in times of crisis and beyond. Our work would not be possible without our readers, who now support our work from 180 countries around the world.

But news organisations are facing an existential threat. With advertising revenues plummeting, the Guardian risks losing a major source of its funding. More than ever before, we're reliant on financial support from readers to fill the gap. Your support keeps us independent, open, and means we can maintain our high quality reporting - investigating, disentangling and interrogating.

Every reader contribution, however big or small, is so valuable for our future. Support the Guardian from as little as £1 - and it only takes a minute. Thank you.

Wiki

Wiki, World Wide Web (WWW) site that can be modified or contributed to by users. Wikis can be dated to 1995, when American computer programmer Ward Cunningham created a new collaborative technology for organizing information on Web sites. Using a Hawaiian term meaning "quick," he called this new software WikiWikiWeb, attracted by its alliteration and also by its matching abbreviation (WWW).

Wikis were inspired in part by Apple's HyperCard program, which allowed users to create virtual "card stacks" of information with a host of connections, or links, among the various cards. HyperCard in turn drew upon an idea suggested by Vannevar Bush in his 1945 Atlantic Monthly article "As We May Think." There Bush envisioned the memex, a machine that would allow readers to annotate and create links between articles and books recorded on microfilm. HyperCard's "stacks" implemented a version of Bush's vision, but the program relied upon the user to create both the text and the links. For example, one might take a musical score of a symphony and annotate different sections with different cards linked together.

Bush also had imagined that memex users might share what he called "trails," a record of their individual travels through a textual universe. Cunningham's wiki software expanded this idea by allowing users to comment on and change one another's text. Perhaps the best-known use of wiki software is Wikipedia, an online encyclopaedia using the model of open-source software development. Individuals write articles and post them on Wikipedia, and these articles are then open for vetting and editing by the community of Wikipedia readers, rather than by a single editor and fact-checker. Just as open-source software—such as the Linux operating system and the Firefox Web browser—has been developed by nonprofit communities, so too is Wikipedia a nonprofit effort.

For those who challenge this model of development, Cunningham and his followers have adopted an interesting position. It is always going to be the case that certain individuals will maliciously attempt to thwart open-source Web sites such as Wikipedia by introducing false or misleading content. Rather than worrying about every user's actions and intentions, proponents of wiki software rely on their community of users to edit and correct what are perceived to be errors or biases. Although such a system is certainly far from foolproof, wikis stand as an example of the origin of an Internet counterculture that has a basic assumption of the goodness of people.

In addition to encyclopaedias, wiki software is used in a wide variety of contexts to facilitate interaction and cooperation in projects at various scales. Manuals have been written using the wiki model, and individuals have adapted wiki software to serve as personal information organizers on personal computers. It remains to be seen to what extent wiki software will provide a foundation for what some computer scientists refer to as Web 2.0, the web of social software that will enmesh users in both their real and virtual-reality workplaces.

Show Us the Data!

February 11, 2009

Today, CDT and OpenTheGovernment.org launched Show Us The Data: Most Wanted Federal Government Documents, a website created with lots of help from our friends at Sunlight Labs. CDT and OpenTheGovernment.org are setting out to identify the ten most wanted government documents, reports or data sets that should be on the Web – but are missing because the government hasn't put them on the Internet.

In the last ten years, the Internet has come a long way- just check out the website for our first Ten Most Wanted survey. The federal government has made great progress in their use of the Internet too, but we know that they still aren't putting the information that we want online as proactively and as usably as we would like. Last year, we talked about how hard it can be to find government information through search.

We're hoping that you, as part of the open government community, can help us make a list of the unclassified information that you'd like access to online. We want to know about documents, data sets, databases, and raw information that you can't find or you can't use the way you'd like to, and what the government could do to make it easier. The Internet offers an easy way to distribute public information- for free, and in open formats. The data could be used by interested third parties to make incredible mashups and use the information in ways that the government doesn't.

To bring pressure to bear on the government to make better use of the Internet, CDT and OpenTheGovernment.org are asking for information that would significantly benefit researchers, reporters, communities and individuals- but that isn't online. Send us your nomination: a report written by a federal agency, maps or data sets created through government research projects, or judicial decisions and court proceedings that are available on paper but not online.

What you can do: Check out Show Us The Data, and vote on your Most Wanted document- or nominate a new one! We're taking nominations and votes until March 9th, 2009.

Acknowledgments

This report was made possible through the financial support of the Sunlight Foundation and the work of the Center for Democracy and Technology and OpenTheGovernment.org.

The report benefited from the contributions of the many individuals and organizations contributing information, ideas, and suggestions. The report was written by Patrice McDermott and Amy Fuller of OpenTheGovernment.org, and Ari Schwartz, Jud Watkins, and Heather West of the Center for Democracy and Technology. We thank them for their outstanding work and dedication.

The website was made possible primarily by Bill Allison at the Sunlight Foundation and the contributions of Ali Felski for design, James Turk for database architecture, and Clay Johnson, director of Sunlight Labs.

Finally, we would like to thank everyone who submitted document requests, voted, and commented on the website.

Executive Summary

n the past few months, President Obama and his appointed officials have indicated that policies around open government and information disclosure will change drastically. While each administration adopts its own standards for the management of unclassified federal documents, change at the agency level does not take place instantly nor will such change be universally accepted.

Government accountability is crucial to effective governance; a key tool for accountability is transparency. As Judge Damon Keith noted, "Democracy dies behind closed doors." This report has been timed in order to inform the changes in open government policies that are now underway.

Suggestions for specific documents and data that should be released were solicited broadly, from government officials and interested parties. The list of most wanted documents and data informs our recommendations for policy changes, which are also included in this report, to make government more transparent.

Our last report on this issue, released in 2004, highlighted the obvious problems created by too much secrecy based on national security and other concerns. This year, the survey found that concerns about secrecy go well beyond the national security realm. The government has a tendency to gather information and power from that information only for itself.

- Respondents to the survey cited problems receiving information that should be publicly available from all three branches of government, such as personal financial disclosures.
- According to the survey, members of the public are overwhelming concerned with how their tax dollars are spent during trying economic times.

The project identified several major problem areas facing a more open government.

- Tools exist to open government information, but those clearly established laws have not been adequately implemented in order to fulfill their intent.
- Currently, government officials have little or no incentive to release information to the public. In order to fulfill the goal of opening the government, the administration must take fully implement existing laws, and must address the culture of secrecy pervading the government.

Introduction

he Most Wanted Government Documents survey, our third, was a great success, with over 200 suggestions for Most Wanted documents from the public. Soliciting suggestions from the public via a website was a new step, adding collaboration and new ideas to our report. It is clear from the responses to our survey that there are wide categories of information and documents that the public would use online, but are not currently accessible.

In this survey and elsewhere, the public is speaking up to demand access to information, and public officials are listening. The 21st Century Right to Know Report, a collaboratively written government transparency report released in November 2008, makes many recommendations to Congress and the Obama Administration for fostering a culture that supports openness. A selection of these and others are highlighted in the Recommendations section.

Members of the public have the right to access the unclassified data and documents created and held by the government. After all, the information was paid for with tax dollars. The suggestions from the public make it clear that information across all branches need to be made available.

The executive branch received the most requests for information in this survey, but all three branches have the same obligation to share documents and data with the public. Simply put, in order to hold the government as accountable as possible, authoritative and accurate information must be public and the government must proactively make it available online.

In the time since this survey was launched, the Obama Administration has released some key opinions from the Office of Legal Counsel (OLC) that were used to justify torture (prior to these releases, these documents were on this Top Ten list and received a large number of votes from the public) and the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, Senator Joe Lieberman, has urged policy makers to improve public access to Congressional Research Service (CRS) reports and the Public Access to Court Electronic Records (PACER) system (first and third on the Top Ten list, respectively).

There are costs associated with making some documents and data sets available online, but most of the documents in this year's survey are already available in some form, just not in formats that are easy to use or online. Some documents are made available or sold by third parties, making access dependent on the user's budget. Some are not made available online by the government, however. Third-party availability is not enough; it is the government's basic responsibility to make information available to and usable by the public. If the government produces an unclassified document (or an unclassified version of a classified document), that document should be made available and accessible to the public online. On a similar note, if the documents are available but difficult for the average web-user to obtain, the federal government must make a greater effort to make the documents easily available, findable and searchable.

Indeed, on his first day in office, President Obama released a Memorandum on Transparency and Open Government that directed his Administration to develop recommendations that move federal agencies toward a "transparent, participatory, and collaborative" government. As we have seen with past initiatives, however, the best policy will not accomplish anything unless it is fully and carefully implemented across government. Once the policy is in place, the open government community and the public must continue to monitor the state of open government and continue to pressure policy makers to turn over information and data that rightfully belongs to the public and would improve public health and safety.

In order to gain a sense of what unclassified federal government documents are the "most wanted" by the public, a website was established to allow users to submit requests and vote on the importance of posted documents. Members of the staff at CDT and OpenTheGovernment.org seeded the survey with some initial requests based on previous surveys, but the vast majority of submissions were from the public. Documents requested varied from Congressional Research Service reports (the only requests to make both of the previous lists and number one vote-getter this year), to information about toxic waste in local communities, to lobbyist fact sheets. As the number of requests grew beyond 200, the desire and need for transparency in all three branches became more and more apparent.

Overall, the Show Us the Data website received thousands of visits, more than 200 documents requested and nearly 2000 votes. While the votes of the public via the website have significantly informed the final list of Top Ten Most Wanted documents, the list that differs slightly from the documents that received the most votes. This Top Ten list highlights the best of the top vote receivers, but also later submissions that, while important, did not have as much time to generate votes. Background information about both the Top Ten Most Wanted documents and the top vote recipients is included, and policy recommendations are included based on the issues in public access to these Top Ten Most Wanted Documents.

Findings:

- Many issues pointed out in the 1999 and 2004 projects remain central; the balance between disclosure and national security, for example, remains a highly debated topic as it was in our 2004 survey and the survey website indicates there is still a general feeling that too much information is classified.
- Financial disclosure in government is a central concern, in no small part because of the current economic conditions. Numerous requests about government contracts, congressional spending, and bailout funding were made. An overwhelming demand for transparency in relation to government spending is evident.
- A key divide became apparent in information availability via third-party websites and via official government websites. Congressional voting records searchable by individual Member., for example, came up time and time again While these are available via a third party websites (and thus commercial search as well), someone searching through the official Congressional search engine on Thomas will find no results.
- On a similar note, the day to day activities of elected and appointed officials is highly sought after. Coming back to the effective use of resources, respondents want to know how government officials are using their time and who they are meeting with. While some agencies use blogs as part of their citizen outreach, it is still not the clear window in to federal meetings and use of time.
- Sometimes, the problem is not that the documents do not exist, it is that they are not easy to find, or they are available but not through an official, direct government source.
- Finally, putting information online is simply not enough; it must also be accessible, easy to use, and easy to reuse. ★

Background on each of the Most Wanted Documents

1. Public Access to All Congressional Research Service Reports

Legislative Branch

The Congressional Research Service (CRS) uses taxpayer dollars to produce excellent reports on public policy issues ranging from foreign affairs, to agriculture, to health care. These reports are made accessible to Congress and their staff through on an internal system, and these are never released to the public directly from the Congressional Research Service. Members of the public can ask for these reports through their member of Congress, but they must first know that the report exists. Third party websites, such as Open CRS, collect and share the reports for free but for years the only way to get reports was to buy from third party, for profit companies.

Recently, Wikileaks released thousands of CRS reports. While this is a great step in information gathering, it does not address the core problem. CRS reports should be made available through an official government website without members of the public having to work to track them down on their own time.

CRS Reports are the only document to make the Most Wanted list all three times the survey was undertaken. The public has made clear, repeatedly, the need to have access to all reports from CRS, the authoritative source. Congress should make CRS release these reports to the public proactively and directly.

2. Information About the Use of TARP and Bailout Funds

Executive Branch

The Troubled Asset Relief Program (TARP) authorized the use of taxpayer money to purchase assets from financial institutions that were struggling, and has often been referred to as 'the bailout'. After $300 billion in bailout money was distributed, the actual use of this money by individual companies is still largely unknown.

Any credible solution to today's economic crisis must address the corruption and other abuses of power sustained by secrecy. Every time a corporation asks for another round of bailout money without disclosing the exact details of how previous money was spent, taxpayers feel taken advantage of.

It is important to note that bailout funds are not the same as the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, often called 'the stimulus,' and the website accompanying it, recovery.gov. These funds and programs are addressed in the "Check Back" section.

3. Open and accessible federal court documents through the PACER System

Judicial Branch

The Public Access to Court Electronic Records system, also known as the PACER System, received the highest number of votes of any document not included in the previous surveys.

The PACER system provides federal court records, including opinions in cases with wide-reaching public repercussions. The public does not have access to these legal precedents, however, without high barriers. The PACER system provides federal court records, but only after the user has previously registered for a password (received via posted mail). The system also charges far more per page than it costs PACER to serve the PDF to the user. In fact, PACER makes a large profit based on these burdensome fees. When PACER offered free access to their documents at select federal depository librar-

A large portion of PACER documents were downloaded for use on third party, free access services; however, PACER shut this free access down ies, a large portion of PACER documents were downloaded for use on third party, free access services. PACER subsequently shut this free access down.

Numerous requests were also made for a variety of free electronic access to court records.

4. Current Contractor Projects

Executive Branch

The federal budget includes billions of dollars for unclassified federal contracts every year, but little information is available about these contracts. These contracts vary from routine maintenance of the White House to the private security forces in Iraq. While limited information about contracts awarded is available online at USASpending.gov, details about the contracts is not. Information about deliverables for each contract are not made public, and there is no public information on sub-contracts, despite a requirement under the Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act to begin sub-award reporting on USASpending.gov by January 2009. A full accounting of these contractors would give a more realistic estimate of the size and more information to help understand the effectiveness of government.

5. Court Settlements Involving Federal Agencies

Judicial Branch

When a dispute involving a federal agency (or even a branch of government) cannot be settled, it occasionally goes to court. A federal court always presides over these cases and, because monetary settlements are unusual, these cases rarely make the papers, and the opinions and terms of settlement are seldom released. Most cases involving agencies settle, and settlements are nearly invisible. A U.S. District Court judgment - including by settlement - against a government agency, is a matter that should be disclosed to the public, without any special request required.

6. Access to Comprehensive Information About Legislation and Congressional Actions via THOMAS or Public Access to Legislative Information Service

Legislative Branch

The public interface to legislative information is THOMAS, hosted by the Library of Congress. While THOMAS does an adequate job of sharing legislative information, it has many obvious limitations. The search functions are simplistic and hard to use, and only last year did THOMAS pages become persistently linkable. In addition, third party websites have created outstanding features like version tracking and links to sections within bills that THOMAS should include.

THOMAS's legislative information provides just a drop in the bucket of information that should be available. Voting records of Members of Congress are public information, for example, and yet countless Members continue to make efforts to prevent the creation of a government-sponsored website to make all their individually-identifiable decisions as public officials easily available. Numerous effective third-party websites exist, but full disclosure and open government require an official Congressionally-sponsored website.

Members of Congress and their staff have access to the Legislative Information Service (LIS), a much more fully featured source of legislative information. One way to easily make legislative information available is to grant public access to the LIS.

7. Online Access to Electronic Campaign Disclosures

Legislative Branch

The Senate is still using a hard copy system for filing campaign finance reports, although the reports are usually generated as electronic documents. As a result of paper filing and because of the processing time needed by Federal Election Commission, final disclosure reports of senatorial candidates only become available to the voting public after elections.

During the 110th Congress, legislation to require Senators to file FEC reports electronically was approved by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, but was never brought to the floor for a vote; the bill has been re-introduced in the 1111th Congress as S. 482, with wide support; at the time of this printing, the bill had 30 sponsors in the Senate.

8. Daily Schedules of the President and Cabinet Officials

Executive Branch

Presidents have made their daily schedule available to reporters for years, but have never posted them online, despite great interest in the president's actions and who the president and his advisors meet with. Griffin Bell, Attorney General under President Carter, was the first cabinet secretary to make his schedule regularly available. Only a few others have followed his lead in over 30 years. To achieve transparency, we need to know what our White House officials are doing.

9. Personal Financial Disclosures from Policymakers across Government

All Branches

An over-arching theme of the document requests was the desire for the highest level of financial disclosure possible from policymakers, including timely campaign finance information from the Senate (one of the top voted documents). During difficult economic times, the voting public is especially concerned with tracking conflicts of interest between elected and appointed officials and the entities they regulate. Requests for financial activity disclosures were made across all branches. All branches should make an accelerated effort to improve their financial disclosure efforts.

Many executive branch filings are collected by various agencies and, in the case of Senate-confirmed appointees, by the U.S. Office of Government Ethics. The public can request a copy of these forms, but only via postal mail or fax with an official request form. The personal financial disclosure reports could reveal conflicts of interest. These reports should be made available online as a searchable, reusable database.

10. State Medicaid Plans and Waivers

Executive Branch and State Agencies

Medicaid State plans amendments and waivers are documents each state has that describe their Medicaid programs and all rules and amendments that have been made and approved by the federal government. These plans are in very hard to find in their current locations. Historically, the plans have been on the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services website - the same goes for waivers. However, the documents on the site are usually not current, and sometimes are not accurate. More careful maintenance of the information is needed in order to make this important information easy to find and use. Previously there were links to specific state plans and their websites, but many links are missing or out of date.

The documents on the site are usually not current, and sometimes are not acccurate

Additional Background for Top Ten Voted Documents

Opinions of the Department of Justice Office of Legal Counsel

Executive Branch

The Office of Legal Counsel of the Department of Justice issues memoranda that assess whether activities of agencies of the federal government comply with the law and the U.S. Constitution. Its opinions can effectively authorize or prohibit conduct that is at the legal boundary. A number of its interpretations of the Bush Administration's warrantless surveillance program, and of the applicability of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, have been kept secret from the public and even from Congress. While some facts surrounding such surveillance are necessarily classified, the government's interpretation of the law should most definitely be public. The OLC's opinions on intelligence surveillance should be made public with appropriate redactions to protect classified information.

These memos would have been on the Ten Most Wanted list, but in the time since this survey was launched, the Obama Administration has released some key opinions from the Office of Legal Counsel (OLC) that were used to justify torture. Given this move in the right direction, we have instead included these memos in the "Check Back" section.

GAO Legislative History

Legislative Branch

The GAO legislative histories are authoritative and comprehensive histories, compiled by GAO law librarians, of federal legislation after 1915. These documents are not available to the public, however. Instead, GAO contracted with a third party, Thomson-West, to digitize these histories, and the histories are now exclusively licensed to Thomson-West. GAO themselves lost access to the data digitized by this contract and now only have access through an account with Thomson-West.

These documents are incredibly valuable to the public and should be in the public domain, as they are not copyrighted. Federal contracts for digitization should not give exclusive access to one vendor, but instead should preserve the public right to know and to have no-fee access to information prepared at taxpayer expense.

PATRIOT Act Usage & Rationale

Executive Branch

The PATRIOT Act and associated civil liberties violations remain on the most wanted list from the 2004 Ten Most Wanted. The facts have not changed; the public has a right to know the details of when special investigative power is extended under the PATRIOT Act. This is especially important in investigations not directly related to terrorism. Currently the Judicial Branch is not providing statistical reports on PATRIOT Act usage, and without such reports, the public has no method of knowing when the courts might be allowing law enforcement to overstep investigative boundaries. ★

Challenges and Barriers to making Government Information Available Online

Results from the survey show that barriers to open government continue to exist across the government. Secrecy is not the sole province of any branch of government: respondents nominated and voted for information that they want to be made available by the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches. The tendency of government is to gather information and power to itself, and incentives are not well balanced in order to encourage public release of information. Despite recent encouraging moves by the new administration, it will take a sustained effort to ensure that a transparent and open government is advanced, and sustained.

A solid infrastructure of public access laws exists. Unfortunately, the government has failed to fully and faithfully implement public access laws and policies, and significant loopholes have eroded the public's access to and faith in government information. These include the E-Government Act of 2002, the E-FOIA Amendments of 1996, the Paperwork Reduction Act and Circular A-130, and the Freedom of Information Act.

• The E-Government Act of 2002: This law contains many provisions intended to make government information more findable and usable. It directs OMB to issue policies on the adoption of standards, open to the maximum extent feasible to enable the organization and categorization of government information in a way that is searchable electronically and in ways that are interoperable across agencies. The Act was intended to improve the preservation of, and public access to, electronic information by "achieving greater compliance with the Federal Records Act with respect to electronic records." It requires agencies, after solicitation of public comment, to determine what types of government information they intend to make available on the Internet and by other means, and develop timetables for doing so. The subsection provides for public comment throughout the process, and requires that agencies update their determinations as appropriate. Section 205 requires federal courts to provide greater access to judicial information over the Internet, and amends existing law regarding the fees that the Judicial Conference prescribes for access to electronic information to read, "[t]he Judicial Conference may, only to the extent necessary, prescribe reasonable fees for collection by the courts for access to information available through automatic data processing equipment."

- Electronic FOIA: 1996 amendments to FOIA simplified access to federal government records through the use of electronic communications media. Members of the public request more than 600,000 records a year from federal agencies, a volume that threatens to overwhelm some agencies. For example, members of the public requesting information from the Federal Bureau of Investigation is likely to wait four years for the information. By requiring information to be made available electronically, Congress sought to lessen the burden on federal agencies created by paper processing and ensure the public timely and meaningful access to information by requiring agencies to make oftrequested records proactively available. E-FOIA requires agencies to create online reading rooms of frequently requested records and opinions not published in the Federal Register. The E-FOIA amendments also required agencies to include databases as FOIA records, and to make information easily accessible to users. The legislative history of the 1996 Amendments to the FOIA make it clear that Congress expected OMB to give guidance on E-FOIA, but OMB has not provided comprehensive guidance. The result has been a failure to meet the important public access goals of FOIA, as agency upon agency fails to comply with the law.
- Paperwork Reduction Act/Circular A-130: Circular A-130 was published by OMB to establish policy and guide the management of the informational resources of federal agencies, as mandated by the PRA. This circular reinforces the importance of efficient management of information resources, including the "free flow of information" and the effective dissemination of government information to members of the public. Circular A-130 indicates that agencies should use techniques that reduce the burden on the public to access agency materials. Agencies are required to "[d]isseminate information in a manner that achieves the best balance between the goals of maximizing the usefulness of the information and minimizing the cost to the government and the public." Since the information is already distributed via agency Web sites, it would take very little effort to ensure that the information is widely accessible to the public via search engines. While Circular A-130 delves deeply into the specifics of how to manage information resources, it is clear that at a higher level, it is a document that mandates and guides agencies in making government resources easily available. This includes making the agency resources and information available to the largest possible audience.

Since the information is already distributed via agency Web sites, it would take very little effort to ensure that the information is widely accessible to the public via search engines.

• The Freedom of Information Act: Signed into law in 1966, FOIA grants members of the public the right to access information held by the government — the right to obtain reproductions of records created and maintained by and for federal government agencies. FOIA affirmed the public's right-to-know as a central principle of our democratic government and open society. Each of six amendments to FOIA since 1966 broadened the act to cover more information deemed necessary to ensure the public's right to know about the activities of the federal government. The Freedom of Information Act covers almost all non-classified records (including electronic records) created within federal departments, agencies, and offices, federal regulatory agencies, and federal corporations. Journalists, public interest organizations, and members of the public view FOIA as an important tool in opening federal agency policies and practices to public scrutiny. While FOIA is one of the most important public access laws, FOIA offices are not well funded, and a backlog of requests exists in many FOIA offices throughout the government. In addition, there is no oversight within the Executive Branch of agency compliance and only intermittent oversight from Congress.★

any barriers stand between government information and the public. Policies and practices can be changed to open the government and disseminate the information generated by the government, and we offer recommendations that would help the government disseminate information proactively.

The Open Government Directive should direct federal government agencies to move rapidly to providing all new government information (documents, data, etc.) and data in open, structured, machine-readable formats that will permit the public – nonprofits, companies, individuals – and other government entities to grab the information, reuse it, and combine it with other information.

We are also concerned about information created or collected by the judicial and legislative branches of the federal government. The President has taken an excellent first step in directing that an Open Government Directive be drafted to further those goals. We offer this list of recommendations to the President and those responsible for the implementation of the Open Government Directive.

Public, accessible, online information is supported by the goals of government regulations and legislation, including the E-Government Act of 2002, the Paperwork Reduction Act, Electronic FOIA, and other federal materials regarding the management of public informational resources. However, interpretation and implementation of these laws can fall short without government support.

- Open, accessible formats should be mandated for online resources: Agencies should be required to create websites that distribute data in open formats that are accessible to all search engines and reusable by third parties. OMB should direct agencies to actively make all their online resources searchable by major public search engines and available in open formats that can be used by third parties in innovative new ways. While online availability of data does not eliminate the need for more traditional methods of information dissemination, using open formats will ensure that online government data are accessible to the widest possible audience.
- The federal government should have an affirmative legal obligation to disclose information to the public in a timely manner. Our federal public access laws are relatively recent in our history. Until 1966, with passage of FOIA, there was no law giving the public any right to government information. For all its usefulness, however, FOIA is not a true right-to-know law. New openness laws and policies should require agencies to make public information available online proactively and in a timely manner. It is increasingly easy to make electronic information – in all its formats – publicly accessible.

- Records retention rules, digitization guidelines, and model contracts should be revised to ensure public access to digital records in open formats: The federal government needs to update a series of guidelines to firmly establish a requirement of no-fee public access to government records, whether they have been converted to digital formats by the agency or a contractor. The National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) has promulgated guidelines that substantially meet these recommendations for its digitization projects, and these guidelines or similar ones should be applied across the executive branch. Model contracts for conversion of records to digital formats should be developed that preclude private control of public information and charges for public access to such information. These templates should allow flexibility and innovative partnerships while maintaining good stewardship of the public's records.
- Transparency and open government efforts should be well funded: All branches of the government should have proper funding and resources dedicated to transparency efforts in order to ensure information dissemination. Recent years have seen improvements in FOIA policy but little direct help in terms of resources for agencies struggling to properly implement the law; in addition, federal government actors often are not well funded in terms of technical resources that would enable transparency.
- A federal plan for proactive information dissemination should be developed: The CIO Council should develop a strategic plan to rebuild government information dissemination capacity and help agencies put federal information online, beginning with creation of an index of each agency's information holdings (as required by E-FOIA and the E-Government Act). The government needs to rebuild technical capacity for information dissemination in the agencies (and government-wide), because in recent years, most technical work regarding dissemination has been outsourced, and there is not sufficient capacity among governmental personnel to even oversee the work of contractors, much less develop technical dissemination initiatives within the government.
- Existing openness laws should be enforced: Compounding the resource issues and issues with policies, existing laws requiring the release of information are often unenforced, leading to failures to meet the requirements of open government legislation.
- Chief Information Officers should have a position in their office in charge of dissemination and transparency efforts. Working with the CIO and others in the agency with information management responsibilities, this officer should be able to approve and disapprove programs and system acquisitions, as well as working with the public to evaluate the priorities for making public information held by the agency

On the Right Track

A lthough many federal entities have not taken advantage of the Internet's efficiencies, there are some parts of government that are on the right track. Many federal websites use innovative tools to disseminate information to the public.

Library of Congress American Memory Project

The Library of Congress has used online tools to disseminate their wealth of knowledge, not only putting information online but also proactively using online tools to make it more useful. LOC recently put thousands of archived photos from the American Memory Project, memory.loc.gov, online using Flickr, a popular photo-sharing tool, and then asked users to help them tag the images. Rather than cataloguing the pictures internally, LOC 'crowdsourced' the work after opening the information to the public. As a result of LOC releasing these images, they were soon used in blogs all over the Internet, sparking discussion about America's history. The historical value of freeing these images is immeasurable.

LOC also proactively used the Sitemap protocol to make their databases searchable. Hiding in Plain Sight, a report issues on December 11, 2007 by CDT, notes that the LOC databases were unsearchable. They have since made an effort to index their databases using Sitemaps, a common standard embraced by the major search engines. In addition, LOC uses other social media to reach out to the public and establish dialog, including blogging and Twitter. While LOC is on the right track, it is worth noting that some parts of the Library are not- the Congressional Research Service, whose reports received far and away the most votes on our survey, are still not publicly available from LOC. This just underwrites the importance of agency leadership stressing that material should be made accessible.

USASpending.gov is an example of what open government legislation can do when implemented well. While it is clearly not a perfect website, it is an excellent step. The Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act of 2006 requires a single searchable website of all grants, contracts, and loans from the federal government, accessible by the public for free. In 2007, OMB implemented USASpending.gov based directly on third party open government websites tracking federal funding. USASpending.gov makes data available through an application programming interface (API), allowing others to use the information on their own website, and give access to downloads of the information as supplied by the agencies.

NASA

NASA has successfully used social media to promote its programs and educate the public on progress. Notably, the Mars Phoenix was watched by ___ people on Twitter, substantially changing the way that they communicated. In addition, NASA is home to many blogs, often following a mission or a project. NASA's CIO writes a blog with the explicit goal of furthering transparency². NASA's Advisory Council, often notably reticent to release data, released materials from their most recent meeting.

In addition, NASA hosts a technical reports server as a resource for the public. NASA has made available approximately 100,000 technical reports and has made 32 megabytes worth of Space Ops, Aeronautics and Biomedical Powerpoint materials available online, including materials that are still under deliberation (such as future plans for the Shuttle). It seems that NASA has taken President Obama's transparency memos to heart and, in conjunction with the NASA motto- "for the benefit of all"- is proactively releasing information in new ways. While getting this much information online has its difficulties- much of it is not full text searchable- NASA seems devoted to making the information available to the public.

NASA is home to many blogs, often following a mission or a project. NASA's CIO writes a blog with the explicit goal of furthering transparency

National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration

The information released by NOAA is the basis of hundreds of weather services used by the public, from The Weather Channel to the weather application on phones. NOAA releases raw weather information and forecasts in raw data format for use by third parties. Weather and climate sensitive industries in the United States account for about one-third of the Nation's Gross Domestic Product, according to NOAA; these industries depend on timely, accurate information. NOAA sees proactive release of information as part of their mission, and we hope more agencies and federal entities will follow their lead.

Check Back – But We're Optimistic

ere are a few government transparency efforts that are moving in the right direction, but need public and government attention to fully succeed in assuring meaningful public access. We'll be keeping an eye on them, and hope that the public does too.

Recovery.gov

Much has been made of the plan to disseminate information on the new stimulus- the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act- online. Agencies are required by the Act to collect and disseminate information on how they spend ARRA Act money, as well as sending the information to Recovery.gov to be displayed within the larger stimulus context. According to Senator Lieberman, Recoery.gov will have information about grants, contracts, and oversight activities. The public is clearly interested in how the government plans to spend our tax money. According to OMB Deputy Director, Recovery.gov receives 3,000 hits each second. While much of the information around ARRA Act spending is not available yet, we are hopeful that Recovery.gov will be a key element in keeping the public involved, and a source of data for third parties.

Data.gov

As part of the move to making information proactively available, a site has been proposed to centralize access to all feeds of information that are publically available from the federal government. While little is known about the future of this website, we are excited by the idea of a centralized repository for all feeds of government information and the ability to bulk download federal data.

Office of Legal Counsel Memos

The Office of Legal Counsel of the Department of Justice issues memoranda that assess whether activities of agencies of the federal government comply with the law and the U.S. Constitution. Its opinions can effectively authorize or prohibit conduct that is at the legal boundary. As noted earlier in the report, these were highly ranked in our Top Ten until the release of some memos.

While some of those memos have been released, the former administration kept far more memos secret. The new administration is re-evaluating whether these memos should be kept under wraps, and has released nine memos - and may well release more. As one of our top five Most Wanted documents, we are encouraged that the Obama administration is taking a new look at whether this information should be secret.

Conclusion

A few over-arching messages come from participants in this project:

- Members of the public want access. Access to unclassified documents their tax dollars have been used to produce.
- They want direct access. Put differently, the expectation is that access to these documents be through a government website, the closer to the primary source of the document, the better.
- They demand complete data sets in a timely manner. Documents should be made available without parts missing and as quickly as possible considering the resource.
- Data needs to be available to anyone, license-free and free of charge. Datasets should not be exclusively controlled by any third-party, and should not be in a format where any member of the public has to pay for the ability to view or use the document (be it through exclusive software or any other reason).

If all three branches of the federal government work to keep these ideals in mind when creating and releasing unclassified documents, the country will be one step closer towards ideal democracy.

Call To Action

The Center for Democracy and Technology and OpenTheGovernment.org encourage members of the public to hold the federal government accountable for open information on a regular basis. While the "Most Wanted" project is only conducted every five years, both organizations actively work on this topic on a regular basis, maintaining websites, blogs, twitter feeds, and even making direct policy recommendations to federal agencies. We encourage members of the public to do the same. Please call your elected officials, write letters or e-mails to departments that do not have the information you want, and do so with regularity.

Appendix

This is the third Most Wanted Government Documents survey and report, with the first being conducted in 1999 and the second in 2004. The 1999 project was a call for e-mail suggestions of documents the federal government was not providing. The 2004 project was focused more around voting on an already established list.

List of the Ten Most Wanted Documents for 2004

- 1. The 28 Pages: Secret Pages of the Congressional Joint Inquiry into 9/11 Intelligence Failures
- 2. Type of crime investigated each time a PATRIOT Act power was invoked
- 3. A list of the contaminants found in the sources of our drinking water
- 4. Number of court cases partially or totally closed to the public and an explanation of each case's need for secrecy
- 5. Industry-written reports on chemical plants' risks to communities
- 6. Identities of those detained after 9/11 on immigration charges or as material witnesses
- 7. Gifts from lobbyists to Senators and their staff
- 8. Federal contracts, grants and other agreements, their total value (in dollars), records documenting violations, and fines and other federal enforcement actions
- All changes made to publicly available versions of congressional legislation before a committee vote (the "chairman's mark")
- 10. Congressional Research Service Reports

List of the Ten Most Wanted Documents for 1999

- 1. Congressional Research Service (CRS) reports
- 2. Supreme Court Web site (including opinions and briefs)
- 3. State Department's Daily Briefing Book
- 4. EPA Pesticide Safety Database
- 5. Full Text of all Congressional Hearings
- 6. DOJ Court Briefs
- 7. Congressional votes in searchable database
- 8. Endangered Species Recovery Plans
- 9. Official Gazette of Trademarks
- 10. Circuit Court Web Sites

Methodology

In order to make a thorough list of the Most Wanted government documents, we departed from previous models of the Most Wanted survey. In this year's survey of the Most Wanted Government Documents, we created a website to accept nominations for Most Wanted documents and asked users to vote on their Most Wanted documents. Previous surveys called for emails or provided a list of documents for people to vote on. The 2009 survey website gave equal opportunity for document requests from each branch of government.

The homepage of ShowUsTheData.org has tabs for each branch centered at the top, immediately beside the "Request a Document" button.

The website was pre-populated with at least three documents per branch. Once voting began, the website shoed the documents that have received the most votes, and recently requested documents lower down on the page for each of the branches of government. While this may have created a front-loaded bias (see Caveats), it was a conscious decision with the intention of having higher quality requests immediately accessible to users, as opposed to page visitors seeing recently requested documents front and center.

The timing of this project is also a very important part of the method. Promises from the new administration concerning openness in government give the project some urgency as transparency goals are shaped. The voting period was designed to conclude within the first months of the new administration's tenure. The website voting period was from February 10, 2009 until March 10, 2009.

Each document request had a comments forum in order to allow users to add more information or sources for each document. Users could comment when a document was requested that may already exist on a government website or had already been posted on the Show Us the Data site.

Some document requests were not always legitimate or credible. Therefore, as site moderators we could either delete non-legitimate requests or requests that were not clear to users. We attempted to keep requests that were not defined but were in fact about federal information. Therefore, only spam postings were deleted. Duplicate postings were not eliminated, but voting tended to remain concentrated around the originally posted document. (For exceptions and outliers, please see Caveats.)

The website allowed users to vote for up to three documents without regard to branch or other considerations. Votes were limited based on user IP address in order to allow for voting without a login and to avoid tracking technologies.

We attempted to keep requests that were not defined but were in fact about federal information.

At the conclusion of the voting period, a list of documents was compiled. In determining the list of Most Wanted documents, user votes were considered alongside recommendations from top open government and transparency experts. Those documents that were Most Wanted by users of ShowUsThe-Data.org are marks as such in the Top Most Wanted list.

Caveats

The Show Us The Data: Most Wanted Federal Government Documents survey methodology has a number of clear limitations. A major source of bias in this public survey is the website structure and navigation scheme; those limitations, and other sources of bias are addressed below.

The website allowed each user to vote three times. The restrictions on voting were controlled by tracking IP addresses. Therefore, it is fair to assume some users may have voted at more than one location or even voted numerous times through the use of proxy servers.

In order to get Show Us The Data off the ground, the website needed a foundation of documents. Internally, this foundation was referred to as the "pre-population list." The staff at the Center for Democracy and Technology, OpentheGovernment.org, and the Sunlight Foundation generated this list based on previous surveys. Consequently, the foundation of the website was biased in favor of documents suggested and then described by staff members working in the field of open government. The repopulation list included the following documents:

- Executive: Bailout Funds; PATRIOT Act Usage and Rationale; Full List of Contractors; Daily schedules for the President and Cabinet Officials; EPA Regional Public Health Hazard List; State Department Daily Briefing Book; Personal Financial Disclosures.
- Legislative: CRS reports; Exhaustive List of Congressional Members Votes; Full List of Contractors; Personal Financial Disclosures.
- Judicial: Supreme Court Website; FOIA Requests; Federal Court Press Releases; Opinions on OLC Rulings.

The website's search features were limited, and searched only the title of the document rather than the respective description and comments. Furthermore, the search feature did not automatically prompt the option to search again. Instead, the website assumed if a search was not successful, users would want to submit a document with the word(s) searched and therefore a "Submit a New Document" screen was prompted. This likely led to the creation of many one-word document requests that were intended as searches of existing documents. The "Submit" and "Search" keys were admittedly similar in appearance, and the "Search Again" features required scrolling to the bottom of the page. A likely consequence of this was moderate amount of document requests were one-word requests with no description and listed as "unknown department." While not all these document requests were the result of this search issue, it is likely that some of them were. They have been included in the survey results.

The homepage of the website only listed the current top five requested documents according to votes. Additionally, there was no link on the homepage to allow users to see an exhaustive list of documents. Once a specific branch was selected, users had the option of seeing a full list of that branch, but never a full list of all of the documents, without specification of government branch. The lack of such a link from the homepage led to a strong bias in favor of those documents receiving votes initially.

The Show Us the Data project voting is not intended to be empirical or a random sampling of the U.S. population, and is not a statistically sound sampling. The votes admittedly came primarily from members of the public who are highly active in open government activities. However, this year's project had a much larger audience due to publicity through blogs and social networking sites such as Twitter. ★

Wikileaks-Hosted "Most Wanted Leaks" Reflects the Transparency Priorities of Public Contributors

The government recently released a superseding indictment[1] against Wikileaks editor in chief Julian Assange, currently imprisoned and awaiting extradition in the United Kingdom. As we've written before, this prosecution poses a clear threat to journalism, and, whether or not Assange considers himself a journalist, the indictment targets routine journalistic practices such as working with and encouraging sources during an investigation.

While considering the superseding indictment, it's useful to look at some of the features carrying over from the previous version. Through much of the indictment, the government describes and refers back to a page on the Wikileaks website describing the "Most Wanted Leaks of 2009.[2]" The implication in the indictment is that Wikileaks was actively soliciting leaks with this Most Wanted Leaks list, but the government is leaving out a crucial piece of nuance about the Most Wanted Leaks page: Unlike much of Wikileaks.org, the Most Wanted Leaks was actually a publicly-editable wiki.

Rather than viewing this document as a wishlist generated by Wikileaks staff or a reflection of Assange's personal priorities, we must understand that this was a publicly-generated list developed by contributors who felt each "wanted" document offered information that would be valuable to the public.

Archives of the page show evidence of the editable nature of the document:

The Most Wanted Leaks page shows that it has visible "edit" links, similar to what one might find on any wiki page.

Language on the page says that one can "securely and anonymously" add your nomination by directly editing the page:

And goes on to encourage contributors to "simply click "edit" on the country below" to make changes to the page:

Nominations follow. Simply click "edit" on the country below. If your country does not yet exist in the list, please add it to the country that it alphabetically close to it, via typing "== country name ==". See how the other countries are specified for examples.

Be attentive to the content of your nomination. Do not worry about making formatting mistakes. All copies of this page are kept and reviewed.

While we don't know how many people contributed to the page at the time, the different formatting and writing styles across the page support the idea that this page was edited by many different people. But the government's indictment, which names this document no less than 14 times and dedicates multiple pages to describing it, never explains the crowd-sourced nature of the Most Wanted Leaks document.

It's easy to understand why. The government prosecutors are trying to paint a picture of Assange as a mastermind soliciting leaks, and is charging him with violating computer crime law and the Espionage Act. It doesn't suit their narrative to show Wikileaks as a host for a crowdsourced page where activists, scholars, and government accountability experts from across the globe could safely and anonymously offer their feedback on the transparency failures of their own governments. But as we analyze the indictment, it's important that we keep this context in mind. It's overly simplistic to describe the Most Wanted Leaks list, as the government does in its indictment, as "ASSANGE's solicitation of classified information made through the Wikileaks website" or a way "to recruit individuals to hack into computers and/or illegally obtain and disclose classified information Wikileaks." This framing excises the role of the untold number of contributors to this page, and lacks an understanding of how modern wikis and distributed projects work.

We've long argued that working with sources to obtain classified documents of public importance is a well-established and integral part of investigative journalism and protected by the First Amendment. Even if Assange had himself written and posted everything on the Most Wanted Leaks page, then the First Amendment would protect his right to do so. There is no law in the United States that would prevent a publisher from publicly listing the types of stories or leaks they would like to be made publicly. But that's not what happened here —in this case, Wikileaks was providing a forum where contributors from around the world could identify documents and data they felt were important to be made public. And the First Amendment clearly protects the rights of websites to host a public forum of that nature.

Many of the documents on the Most Wanted Leaks page are of clear public interest. Some of the documents requested by editors of the page include:

- Lists of domains that are censored (or on proposed or voluntary censorship lists) in China, Australia, Germany, and the U.K.
- In Austria, the source code for e-Voting systems used in student elections.
- Documents detailing the Vatican's interactions with Nazi Germany.
- Profit-sharing agreements between the Ugandan government and oil companies
- PACER the United States' federal court record search database.

While today it's in the government's interest to paint Wikileaks as a rogue band of hackers directed by Assange, the Most Wanted Leaks page epitomizes one of the most important features of Wikileaks: that as a publisher, it served the public interest. Wikileaks served activists, human rights defenders, scholars, reformers, journalists and other members of the public. With the Most Wanted Leaks page, it gave members of the public a platform to speak anonymously about documents they believed would further public understanding. It's an astonishingly thoughtful and democratic way for the public to educate and communicate their priorities to potential whistleblowers, those in power, and other members of the public.

The ways Wikileaks served and furthered the public interest doesn't fit the prosecution's litigation strategy. If Assange goes to court to combat the Espionage charges he is facing, he may well be prevented from discussing the public interest and impact of Wikileaks' publication history. That's because the Espionage Act, passed in 1917, pre-dated modern communications technology and was never designed as a tool to crack down on investigative journalists and their publishers. There's no public interest defense to the Espionage Act, and those charged under the Espionage Act may have no chance to even explain their motivation or the impact—good or bad—of their actions.

Assange's arrest in April 2019 was based on a single charge, under the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act (CFAA), arising from a single, unsuccessful attempt to crack a password. At the time, it was clear to us that the government's CFAA charge was being used as a thin cover for attacking the journalism. The original May 2019 Superseding Indictment added 17 additional charges to the CFAA charge, and clarifying it was charging both conspiracy and a direct violation. In the Second Superseding Indictment, however, the direct CFAA charge is gone, leaving the charge of Conspiracy to Commit Computer Intrusion. The government removed the paragraphs specifying the password cracking as the particular factual grounds, now basing this Count vaguely on the acts "described in the [27 page] General Allegations Section of this Indictment."

Removing the direct CFAA charge does not make this indictment any less dangerous as an attack on journalism. These General Allegations include many normal journalistic practices, all essential to modern reporting: communications over secure chat service, transferring files with cloud services, removing usernames and logs to protect the source's identity, and, now in the Second Superseding Indictment, having a crowd-sourced list of documents that the contributors believed would further public understanding. By removing the factual specificity, the Second Superseding Indictment only deepens the chilling effect on journalists who use modern tools to report on matters of public interest.

Regardless of how you feel about Assange as a person, we should all be concerned about his prosecution. If found guilty, the harm won't be just to Assange himself—it will be to every journalist and news outlet that will face legal uncertainty for working with sources to publish leaked information. And a weakened press ultimately hurts the public's ability to access truthful and relevant information about those in power. And that is directly against the public interest.

Read the new charges against Assange.

Washington's Culture of Secrets, Sources and Leaks

In 1971, when The New York Times was fighting to publish the Pentagon Papers, Times Washington Bureau Chief Max Frankel filed this deposition in which he details how leaks are the way Washington runs -- its "currency." As he explains, leaks were an unofficial back channel for testing policy ideas and government initiatives. In this deposition, Frankel lists several examples in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations of how government kept secrets, but also used them, and leaked them, when it served their purpose.

MAX FRANKEL, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

- 1. I am the Washington Bureau Chief and the Washington correspondent of The New York Times. I have been a reporter on The Times for 20 years, including 5 years as a foreign correspondent, mostly in Moscow, and 10 years in Washington. In our capital, I have been successively The Times' diplomatic correspondent, White House correspondent and, currently, chief correspondent, supervising the work of 35 editors and reporters, including most of those who prepared the disputed series of articles.
- 2. I submit this affidavit in opposition to the pending motion by the United States for an injunction barring The Times, among other things, from printing further documents relating to its current series of articles on the Vietnam war.

- 3. The Government's unprecedented challenge to The Times in the case of the Pentagon papers, I am convinced, cannot be understood, or decided, without an appreciation of the manner in which a small and specialized corps of reporters and a few hundred American officials regularly make use of so-called classified, secret, and top secret information and documentation. It is a cooperative, competitive, antagonistic and arcane relationship. I have learned, over the years, that it mystifies even experienced government professionals in many fields, including those with Government experience, and including the most astute politicians and attorneys.
- 4. Without the use of "secrets" that I shall attempt to explain in this affidavit, there could be no adequate diplomatic, military and political reporting of the kind our people take for granted, either abroad or in Washington and there could be no mature system of communication between the Government and the people. That is one reason why the sudden complaint by one party to these regular dealings strikes us as monstrous and hypocritical -- unless it is essentially perfunctory, for the purpose of retaining some discipline over the Federal bureaucracy.
- 5. I know how strange all this must sound. We have been taught, particularly in the past generation of spy scares and Cold War, to think of secrets as secrets -- varying in their "sensitivity" but uniformly essential to the private conduct of diplomatic and military affairs and somehow detrimental to the national interest if prematurely disclosed. By the standards of official Washington -- Government and press alike -- this is an antiquated, quaint and romantic view. For practically everything that our Government does, plans, thinks, hears and contemplates in the realms of foreign policy is stamped and treated as secret -- and then unraveled by that same Government, by the Congress and by the press in one continuing round of professional and social contacts and cooperative and competitive exchanges of information.
- 6. The governmental, political and personal interests of the participants are inseparable in this process. Presidents make "secret" decisions only to reveal them for the purposes of frightening an adversary nation, wooing a friendly electorate, protecting their reputations. The military services conduct "secret" research in weaponry only to reveal it for the purpose of enhancing their budgets, appearing superior or inferior to a foreign army, gaining the vote of a congressman or the favor of a contractor. The Navy uses secret information to run down the weaponry of the Air Force. The Army passes on secret information to prove its superiority to the Marine Corps. High officials of the Government reveal secrets in the search for support of their policies, or to help sabotage the plans and policies of rival departments. Middle-rank officials of government reveal secrets so as to attract the attention of their superiors or to lobby against he orders of those superiors. Though not the only vehicle for this traffic in secrets -- the Congress is always eager to provide a forum -- the press is probably the most important.
- 7. In the field of foreign affairs, only rarely does our Government give full public information to the press for the direct purpose of simply informing the people. For the most part, the press obtains significant information bearing on foreign policy only because it has managed to make itself a party to confidential materials, and of value in transmitting these materials from government to other branches and offices of government as well as to the public at large. This is why the press has been wisely and correctly called The Fourth Branch of Government.
- 8. I remember during my first month in Washington, in 1961, how President Kennedy tried to demonstrate his "toughness" toward the Communists after they built the Berlin wall by having relayed to me some direct-quotations of his best arguments to Foreign Minister Gromyko. We were permitted to quote from this conversation and did so. Nevertheless, the record of the conversation was then, and remains today, a "secret."
- 9. I remember a year later, at the height of the Cuban missile crises, a State Department official concluding that it would surely be in the country's interest to demonstrate the perfidy of the same Mr. Gromyko as he denied any knowledge of those missiles in another talk with the President; the official returned within the hour and let me take verbatim notes of the Kennedy-Gromyko transcript -- providing only that I would not use direct quotations. We printed the conversation between the President and the Foreign Minister in the third person, even though the record probably remains a "secret."
- 10. I remember President Johnson standing beside me, waist-deep in his Texas swimming pool, recounting for more than an hour his conversation the day before, in 1967, with Prime Minister Kosygin of the Soviet Union at Glassboro, N.J., for my "background" information, and subsequent though not immediate use in print, with a few special off-the-record sidelights that remain confidential.
- 111. I remember Secretary of State Dean Rusk telling me at my first private meeting with him in 1961 that Laos is not worth the life of a single Kansas farm boy and that the SEATO treaty, which he sould [sic] later invoke so elaborately in defense of the intervention in Vietnam, was a useless instrument that should be retained only because it would cause too much diplomatic difficulty to abolish it.
- 12. Similar dealings with high officials continue to this day.
- 13. We have printed stories of high officials of this Administration berating their colleagues and challenging even the President's judgment about Soviet activities in Cuba last year.
- 14. We have printed official explanations of why American intelligence gathering was delayed while the Russians moved missiles to the Suez Canal last year.

- 15. These random recollections are offered here not as a systematic collection of secrets made known to me for many, usually self-evident (and also self-serving) reasons. Respect for sources and for many of the secrets prevents a truly detailed accounting, even for this urgent purpose. But I hope I have begun to convey the very loose and special way in which "classified" information and documentation is regularly employed by our government. Its purpose is not to amuse or flatter a reporter whom many have come to trust, but variously to impress him with their stewardship of the country, to solicit specific publicity, to push out diplomatically useful information without official responsibility, and, occasionally, even to explain and illustrate a policy that can be publicly described in only the vaguest terms.
- 16. This is the coin of our business and of the officials with whom we regularly deal. In almost every case, it is secret information and much of the time, it is top secret. But the good reporter in Washington, in Saigon, or at the United Nations, gains access to such information and such sources because they wish to use him for Loyal purposes of government while he wishes to use them to learn what he can in the service of his readers. Learning always to trust each other to some extent, and never to trust each other fully -- for their purposes are often contradictory or downright antagonistic -- the reporter and the official trespass regularly, customarily, easily, and unselfconsciously (even unconsciously) through what they both know to be official "secrets." The reporter knows always to protect his sources and is expected to protect military secrets about troop movements and the like. He also learns to cross-check his information and to nurse it until an insight or story has turned tripe. The official knows, if he wishes to preserve this valuable channel and outlet, to protect his credibility and the deeper purpose that he is trying to serve.

The Role of "Classified" Information

17. I turn now in an attempt to explain, from a reporter's point of view, the several ways in which "classified" information figures in our relations with government. The Government's complaint against The Times in the present case comes with ill-grace because Government itself has regularly and consistently, over the decades, violated the conditions it suddenly seeks to impose upon us -- in three distinct ways:

First, it is our regular partner in the informal but customary traffic in secret information, without even the pretense of legal or formal "declassification." Presumably, many of the "secrets" I cited above, and all the "secret" documents and pieces of information that form the basis of the many newspaper stories that are attached hereto, remain "secret" in their official designation.

Second, the Government and its officials regularly and customarily engage in a kind of ad hoc, de facto "declassification" that normally has no bearing whatever on considerations of the national interest. To promote a political, personal, bureaucratic or even commercial interest, incumbent officials and officials who return to civilian life are constantly revealing the secrets entrusted to them. They use them to barter with the Congress or the press, to curry favor with foreign governments and officials from whom they seek information in return. They use them freely, and with a startling record of impunity, in their memoirs and other writings.

Third, the Government and its officials regularly and routinely misuse and abuse the "classification" of information, either by imposing secrecy where none is justified or by retaining it long after the justification has become invalid, for simple reasons of political or bureaucratic convenience. To hide mistakes of judgment, to protect reputations of individuals, to cover up the loss and waste of funds, almost everything in government is kept secret for a time and, in the foreign policy field, classified as "secret" and "sensitive" beyond any rule of law or reason. Every minor official can testify to this fact.

- 18. Obviously, there is need for some secrecy in foreign and military affairs. Considerations of security and tactical flexibility require it, though usually for only brief periods of time. The Government seeks with secrets not only to protect against enemies but also to serve the friendship of allies. Virtually every mature reporter respects that necessity and protects secrets and confidences that plainly serve it.
- 19. But for the vast majority of "secrets," there has developed between the Government and the press (and Congress) a rather simple rule of thumb: The Government hides what it can, pleading necessity as long as it can, and the press pries out what it can, pleading a need and a right to know. Each side in this "game" regularly "wins" and "loses" a round or two. Each fights with the weapons at its command. When the Government loses a secret or two, it simply adjusts to a new reality. When the press loses a quest or two, it simply reports (or misreports) as best it can. Or so it has been, until this moment.

Some Examples

20. Some of the most powerful examples of the widespread traffic in secret information that I describe were found by a few colleagues in the Washington bureau in a most perfunctory search of our files. Even as I write this affidavit I can glance at the Times of June 16, 1971 and find, beside the headline of the Court's temporary restraining order in this case, a sample from our military correspondent, William Beecher:

WASHINGTON--June 15--The Nixon Administration is engaged in a broad policy review aimed at determining course of action that might improve South Vietnam's ability to withstand military assaults next year, after most American forces have been withdrawn...

Other key developments include an estimate by the National Security Council that North Vietnam is building toward a new offensive in the South next year....

Well-placed Administration sources disclose that, against the expected North Vietnamese threat, officials are focusing on the following major questions....

Many planners expect President Nixon to scale down to a residual force of 30,000 to 70,000 men by July 1, 1972, but to leave enough flexibility in the pace of reductions so that many of them can be timed for May and June...

Should this residual force include many helicopter and artillery units to "stiffen" South Vietnamese defenses....

Not a single source of that information is identified by name, either because sources are peddling information for which they have asked not to be held responsible or because they are revealing information without authorization. Either way, they are relaying secret data which we, judging by other confidential contacts, deem reasonably reliable.

- 21. Some of the best examples of the regular traffic I describe may be found in the Pentagon papers that the Government asks us not to publish. The uses of top secret information by our Government in deliberate leaks to the press for the purposes of influencing public opinion are recorded, cited and commented upon in several places of the study. Also cited and analyzed are numerous examples of how the Government tried to control the release of such secret information so as to have it appear at a desired time, or in a desired publication, or in a deliberately loud or soft manner for maximum or minimum impact, as desired.
- 22. The temporary restraining order currently in effect precludes me from citing and quoting these passages in the Pentagon study. Examples of my point are so numerous that despite the great bulk of the papers, we were able to locate more than a dozen different kinds of such passages in less than an hour.
- 23. Extensive samples of stories plainly based on supposedly secret information are annexed to this affidavit. They include not only regular, daily articles but also major contemporary analyses of Government decision-making at several key stages of the Vietnam war, right after the Cuban missile crisis, and shortly after invasion of Cambodia. They include major journalistic investigations of secret institutions, like the Central Intelligence Agency. They combine known facts, pried-out secrets and deliberate disclosures of secrets. They are recognized within the profession and among readers as they most valuable kind of journalism and have never been shown to cause "irreparable" harm to the national security. They have occasionally prompted investigations inside the Government to determine the sources of information, the possible presence of disloyal or dissenting officials or the existence of information not previously given any weight or credibility by higher authority. None of these articles could be fairly described as less "sensitive" or more innocuous than the materials now challenged. None of them ever produced a legal challenge or a request for new legislation.
- 24. Samples of the second kind of traffic in secrets that I mentioned -- the ad hoc, de facto (but by no means authorized, official or "legal") declassification of documents -- are simply too numerous sand too voluminous to collect in this format and on such short notice.
- 25. George Christian of Austin, Tex., former press secretary to President Johnson, who had free admission to all foreign and domestic discussions involving the President, at any level and in any forum, has already published his memoir. It includes 70 pages of narrative on the decisions to end the bombing of North Vietnam in late 1968, with many direct quotations of the President and other officials, many unflattering references to our allies in South Vietnam and a great deal of detailed information, all still highly classified, about the secret negotiations with North Vietnam in Paris. This book, entitled, "The President Steps Down," (MacMillan, 1970), actually covers a period more recent than that discussed in the Pentagon papers, and at a much higher level of government and secrecy.
- 26. Recently a book containing top secret documents from members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff about the very same period covered by The Times' materials was published. The book, entitled "Roots of Involvement," by Marvin Kalb and Elie Abel (pp. 208-212) includes telegram exchanges between General Westmoreland and General Wheeler in early 1968. We are advised that these texts were taken from privately circulated analyses and histories of phases of the war by leading military commanders still on active duty!
- 27. Theodore C. Sorensen's "Kennedy," written within a year of the death of his President, reveals dozens upon dozens of actions, meetings, reports and documents, all still treated as "classified" by the Government and unavailable for more objective journalistic analysis. Sorensen treated the Kennedy-Khrushchev correspondence as private, to protect future channels of communication with Soviet leaders, but the most "secret" of these letters, during the Cuban missile crisis, were fully revealed in two subsequent books, one by Elie Abel and one by Robert F. Kennedy. Sorensen also observes that while Kennedy was still alive he invited Professor Richard Neustadt into Government archives for a contemporary analysis of decision-making of the "Skybolt" affair, the secrets of which were later revealed by the professor in a public account of this minor-missile crisis with Britain.
- 28. Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., kept notes in the White House for his history of the Kennedy years entitled "A Thousand Days." Roger Hilsman, an intelligence officer and then Assistant Secretary of State for the Far East poured his files and secrets into a quick memoir entitled "To Move a Nation" (Doubleday 1967). John Martin, special ambassador during the Dominican Republic invasion of 1965, wrote "Overtaken by Events," (Doubleday, 1966) recounting numerous confidential messages and communications. Chester Cooper, a C.I.A. official involved in Vietnam policy for two decades left the White House to produce what was probably the most complete and best-documented history until the Pentagon papers became available to The Times. "The Secret Search for Peace in Vietnam," by David Kraslow and Stuart Loory of The Los Angeles Times, remains to this day the most thorough newspaper (and book) account of the diplomacy surrounding the war -- through channels that are still deemed "live".

The Pentagon Study

- 29. As The Times indicated in the first of its articles about the Pentagon study that is in question here, it is a massive history of how the United States went to war in Indochina. Its 3,000-page analysis, to which 4,000 pages of official documents are appended, was commissioned by Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara in 1967 and completed in 1968, by which time he had been replaced by Clark M. Clifford. The analysis covers a historical record, as The Times said, from World War II to May, 1968 -- the start of peace talks in Paris, by which time President Johnson had set a limit on further military commitments and revealed his intention to retire. We said that "though far from a complete history, even at 2.5 million words, the study forms a great archive of government decision-making on Indochina over three decades." That was the most concise journalistic definition we could give to the materials. Examination of our report thus far on the study and presentation of its documentation confirms the accuracy of that definition.
- 30. Moreover, the material was treated by The Times as an historical record that was of importance not only to our daily readers but also to the community of scholars that we have long served with a record of events. Our presentation was subjected to the most careful editing so that our report would remain faithful to the Pentagon record itself.
- 31. It is difficult, while publication is suspended, to describe the content and scope of the material. But our first article has already established the framework for our readers. We said the authors of the study reached many broad conclusions and specific findings, including the following:
- (a) "--That the Truman Administration's decision to give military aid to France in her colonial war against the Communist led Vietminh 'directly involved' the United States in Vietnam and 'set' the course of American policy.
- (b) "--That the Eisenhower Administration's decision to rescue a fledgling South Vietnam from a Communist takeover and attempt to undermine the new Communist regime of North Vietnam gave the Administration a 'direct role in the ultimate breakdown of the Geneva settlement' for Indochina in 1954.
- (c) "--That the Kennedy Administration, though ultimately spared from major escalation decisions by the death of its leader, transformed a policy of 'limited-risk gamble,' which it inherited, into a 'broad commitment' that left President Johnson with a choice between more war and withdrawal.
- (d) "--That the Johnson Administration, though the President was reluctant and hesitant to take the final decision, intensified the covert warfare against North Vietnam and began planning in the spring of 1964 to wage overt war, a full year before it publicly revealed the depth of its involvement and its fear of defeat.
- (e) "--That this campaign of growing clandestine military pressure through 1964 and the expanding program of bombing North Vietnam in 1965 were begun despite the judgment of the Government's intelligence community that the measures would not cause Hanoi to cease its support of the Vietcong insurgency in the South, and that the bombing was deemed militarily ineffective within a few months.
- (f) "--That these four succeeding Administrations built up the American political, military and psychological stakes in Indochina, often more deeply than they realized at the time, with large-scale military equipment to the French in 1950; with acts of sabotage and terror warfare against North Vietnam beginning in 1954; with moves that encouraged and abetted the overthrow of President Ngo Dinh Diem of South Vietnam in 1963; with plans, pledges and threats of further action that sprang to life in the Tonkin Gulf clashes in August, 1964; with the careful preparation of public opinion for the years of open warfare that were to follow; and with the calculation in 1965, as the planes and troops were openly committed to sustain combat, that neither accommodation inside South Vietnam would achieve the desired result."
- (g) Further characterizing the materials, our introduction also indicated revelations "about the ways in which several administrations conducted their business on a fateful course, with much new information about the roles of dozens of senior officials of both major political parties and a whole generation of military commanders."
- 32. The Times found the history to be concerned primarily with the decision-making process in Washington and the thoughts, motives, plans, debates and calculations of the decisionmakers. I have seen no materials bearing on future plans of a diplomatic or military nature.

The Times interest throughout, like that of the study itself, in the words of our opening line, was in "how the United States went to war in Indochina."

- 33. In considering the remainder of the material, in preparation for publication, it is difficult to be precise, without compromising our deep conviction that no agency of Government ought to be placed in the position of approving, or being asked to approve, prior to publication, any article or other materials that we plan to publish in the exercise of our profession.
- 34. But it may be helpful to affirm to the Court what is already plain from what we have published so far. The remaining articles will be of the same historical character as the first three, similarly dealing with the decision-making process and the thoughts, debates and calculations of the decision-makers.

- 35. Of the numbered paragraphs in our original introduction to the first article, the materials and accounts bearing on paragraphs (4) and (5) and a part of (6) -- covering the period from early 1964 to the middle of 1965 -- have already appeared in print. The remainder of the introduction was deemed by us to be a fair journalistic summary of the remainder of our story.
- 36. Within the limits we have set on the discussion of our unpublished articles, we can state that the stories will cover, as we have indicated, the origins of the United States involvement in Southeast Asia from World War II forward, in the broad context of our evolving policy for the Pacific, through the period of the Eisenhower Administration and the Geneva conference on Indochina. They will cover the history of policymaking inherited by President Kennedy and the Kennedy years, including the broad perspective of those years, which involved the specific problem of political stability culminating in the overthrow of President Ngo Dinh Diem. Among other things, our stories will also cover the history of other policy decisions through early 1968, including the personal disillusionment with policy felt by Secretary McNamara and the roles of other policymakers.
- 37. The Pentagon papers published and to be published by the Times and a bureaucratic history and analysis of the interaction of events and policy decisions are an invaluable historical record of a momentous era in our history. We cannot believe they should or will be suppressed.

How the Espionage Act morphed into a dangerous tool used to prosecute sources and threaten journalists

Peter Sterne Senior Reporter
June 19, 2017

This is Part II of a three-part series by Freedom of the Press Foundation on the Espionage Act of 1917 on its 100th anniversary. Part I can be read here and Part III can be read here.

"It's called the Espionage Act," Jim Goodale said in an interview last week. "It's not called the Anti-Publishing Act." Goodale, the former general counsel for The New York Times, was referring to the Espionage Act of 1917, a law passed during World War I — 100 years ago this month. Initially, the law was used against anti-war activists and foreign spies. Since the 1970s, though, the law has been re-interpreted as a broad anti-leaks law that outlaws the sharing of classified information with anyone, for any reason.

Goodale first started digging into the history and meaning of the Espionage Act in 1971, when the Nixon administration tried to use the law to get the Times, which he represented, to censor its newspaper.

In June 1971, The New York Times started publishing excerpts of the Pentagon Papers — a 7,000 page, top secret Defense Department report on America's foreign policy in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos from 1945 through 1967. The Times had obtained a copy of the study from whistleblower Daniel Ellsberg, a military analyst who had worked on the report and secretly made photocopies of it in 1969. (Ellsberg later helped found the Freedom of the Press Foundation and is a member of the organization's board of directors.)

The Nixon administration was furious to see the Times' reporting on the real history of the Vietnam War and demanded the paper immediately stop publishing excerpts of the Pentagon Papers. When the Times refused, the Department of Justice argued in federal court that the publication of the classified report violated the Espionage Act (specifically, sub-section 793(e)) and asked for an injunction that would prohibit the paper from publishing any more portions of the report. It was the first time that the U.S. government had attempted to censor a newspaper in federal court.

"It's called the Espionage Act. It's not called the Anti-Publishing Act."

The cases ultimately ended up in front of the Supreme Court, which famously ruled 6-3 that the First Amendment protected newspapers from government censorship in almost all cases. But the narrow decision was only concerned with the question of "prior restraint" — whether or not the government could prevent a newspaper from publishing something—not whether the government could criminally prosecute journalists after the information had been published.

The Court left that question for another time.

Meanwhile, the Nixon administration tried to criminally prosecute Ellsberg for leaking the information to the Times.

Ellsberg and his friend Anthony Russo, who had helped him photocopy the classified report, had already been arrested and indicted under the Espionage Act. They were the first people indicted under the law for providing information to journalists. But the case was dismissed in 1973, once it was revealed that Nixon's goons had tried to find dirt on Ellsberg by illegally breaking into his psychiatrist's office and had also attempted to bribe the trial judge with the FBI directorship.

Far less known than either the Supreme Court case or the Ellsberg prosecution was the Nixon administration's attempt to criminally prosecute the Times.

The Justice Department, led by Attorney General John Mitchell, ended up impaneling a secret grand jury in Boston to investigate Times reporter Neil Sheehan and his wife Susan Sheehan, who was a staff writer at the New Yorker at the time. Though the grand jury spent months subpoenaing journalists and anti-war activists to gather information about how Ellsberg leaked the documents to the Times and Post, many of those subpoenaed refused to testify, and the ultimately the jury disbanded without indicting anyone.

Yet the federal government has still tried to use the Espionage Act as a tool against the press several times since.

In 1975, after the Times reported that U.S. submarines were secretly spying on Soviet communications, President Gerald Ford's administration — including chief of staff Donald Rumsfeld and deputy chief of staff Dick Cheney — talked to the Department of Justice about the possibility of using the Espionage Act against Seymour Hersh, the Times investigative reporter who wrote the article, and his source. In the end, though, the Ford administration took no action.

In 1981, Reagan's Department of Justice threatened to prosecute author James Bamford under the Espionage Act. Bamford, who would go on to write several best selling books about the NSA, was writing his first book about the agency and had used the Freedom of Information Act to legally obtain a Justice Department report investigating the agency's possibly criminal activities. The NSA claimed that the documents were still classified and ordered Bamford to hand them over.

The Justice Department warned Bamford that he could face a "post-publication judicial remedy" if he refused to cooperate. But Bamford refused to hand over the documents and went ahead and published his book. The Justice Department never made good on its threat to charge him under the Espionage Act.

In 1986, CIA director William Casey reportedly talked to deputy attorney general D. Lowell Jensen about the possibility of prosecuting the Times, Washington Post, Newsweek, Time magazine and The Washington Times under the Espionage Act. Casey later met with Post publisher Ben Bradlee and threatened to use the Espionage Act against the paper. Ultimately, nothing came of his threats.

The government finally succeeded, however, in applying the Espionage Act to a source of the press in 1988, when the Fourth Circuit appellate court upheld the conviction of Samuel Morison.

"When a source leaks to a reporter or a publisher, that's not espionage. In order to have espionage, you've got to have a foreign government [to] which you are communicating information."

Morison, an intelligence analyst, had sent the British magazine Jane's Defence Weekly copies of satellite photos that showed a new type of aircraft carrier that the Soviets were building at a Ukrainian shipyard. In 1984, he was arrested and convicted under the Espionage Act. He appealed the conviction to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, arguing that the Espionage Act should not apply to someone who leaked to the press, rather than to a foreign government.

The Fourth Circuit rejected that argument in an opinion that laid the legal foundation for the modern use of the Espionage Act against news organizations' sources. Morison then appealed to the Supreme Court, but the Court declined to hear the case. (Though he was later pardoned by President Clinton, the case law is still cited to this day).

Goodale, who represented the Times in the Pentagon Papers case, believes that the Fourth Circuit's interpretation of the Espionage Act was wrong. In an interview, he said that the courts need to recognize a distinction between between providing classified information to a foreign government (espionage) and providing classified information to a journalist (not espionage).

"What is confusing to some people, such as President Obama, is that when a source leaks to a reporter, it looks like espionage," he said. "But it's not espionage. ... When a source leaks to a reporter or a publisher, that's not espionage. In order to have espionage, you've got to have a foreign government [to] which you are communicating information."

Since the Morison decision, though, the courts have sided with the government's broad interpretation of the Espionage Act as criminalizing all disclosures of classified information, no matter the recipient.

In 2005, nearly two decades after the Morison decision, the George W. Bush administration revived the use of the Espionage Act when the Justice Department accused Lawrence Franklin, a Department of Defense employee, of leaking classified information about U.S. policy toward Iran to two lobbyists for the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, who then allegedly passed some of the information on to the Israeli government.

Franklin never gave the lobbyists any classified documents; he and the lobbyists just verbally discussed information that the government deemed classified.

Both Franklin and the AIPAC lobbyists were arrested and charged under the Espionage Act. Franklin eventually pleaded guilty and was sentenced to more than 12 years in prison, though this was later reduced to 10 months of house arrest, in part because he agreed to cooperate with the government's case against the two lobbyists.

The AIPAC case was the first (and so far only) instance in which Espionage Act charges were brought against someone who had never worked for the government or had a security clearance. It alarmed press freedom groups at the time, given the fact that any Espionage Act precedent involving private citizens could eventually be applied to the press.

The lobbyists argued that the application of the Espionage Act in their case violated the First Amendment rights, since they were not government employees who had agreed to keep the information secret. The federal judge overseeing the case rejected this argument. However, the judge also ruled that the prosecution would have to prove that the lobbyists had intended to harm the national security of the U.S. in order to win the case. To the great relief of media lawyers, the prosecution dropped the case against the lobbyists.

In retrospect, the Franklin and AIPAC cases were the start of a new era of aggressive use the Espionage Act in cases that affected journalists. In December 2005, the Times reported that the NSA had secretly wiretapped millions of Americans' phone calls without warrants. In response, the Department of Justice launched a criminal investigation — not into the NSA's warrantless wiretapping program, which it had secretly approved, but into how the Times found out about it. The Justice Department reportedly assigned five prosecutors and 25 FBI agents to the investigation into the Times' sources.

In May 2006, in the midst of that investigation, Attorney General Alberto Gonzales suggested that the Department of Justice could prosecute Times reporters under the Espionage Act for reporting on the classified NSA program.

"There are some statutes on the book which, if you read the language carefully, would seem to indicate that that is a possibility," he told ABC News.

While the Justice Department never followed through on their threat, the investigation ended up ensnaring multiple alleged whistleblowers.

In December 2008, former Justice Department attorney Thomas
Tamm publicly admitted that he had been a source for the 2005 Times article.
The next month, President Barack Obama — who had harshly criticized the NSA's warrantless wiretapping program on the campaign trail — took office.
Obama's Department of Justice opted not to prosecute Tamm under the Espionage Act.

But Tamm was the exception. Under the Obama administration, the Department of Justice began its current practice of aggressively using the Espionage Act against whistleblowers and leakers who talked to journalists.

Catch up on Part I of the 100 year history of the Espionage Act here and read on to see how Obama and Trump used the law against journalists' sources.

This has been a complete setup of Michael Flynn/They exonerated him completely of being an agent of Russia (Recently Crooked Hillary charged Tulsi Gabbard & Jill Stein with the same thing-SICK), and yet Mr. Comey still runs to the White House on February 14 and conjures up the Obstruction of Justice narrative against/the President when Flynn had been cleared of everything long before that. The DOJ is withholding a lot of evidence & information, as are Clapper & Brennan & all of the people who participated in the complete setup of Michael Flynn."(Terrible!) Sidney Powell. This is a disgrace!/Thank you @foxandfriends! Hopefully this is just the beginning of a massive story of injustice and treason. You will never learn this from the corrupt LameStream Media who get Pulitzer Prizes for reporting the story totally wrong. The ones who report it right get only RESPECT! |
